

MEETCH DIARY TELLS HUNTS FOR BIG GAME

Many Thrilling Experiences in the Open Noted Briefly by One of City's Noted Sportsmen

During his big game hunts the late William B. Meetch, whose funeral obituary was published in this paper...

moving slowly down the hill bearing toward our left," continues the narrative, "which was very fortunate, as it did not place us directly in the path of the white ivory bead eight feet from his shoulder and fired. He broke down and as he raised up he fired again at his shoulder. He humped up at the shot and Bales said, 'You've got him,' and he made a lunge forward and Bales commenced firing. I got one shot off and he fell. We followed shooting as my line of fire was getting too close to Bales, but he emptied his rifle five shots as the huge bear body went leaping, stumbling down the mountainside for a distance of about 75 yards when he went down once more and unable to regain his feet, commenced to roll, Bales appearing on the brow of the hill and passed within 20 yards of Bales and within 25 yards of me. After reloading our rifles we hurried after him only to see the wide path in the snow which marked his course. We followed and found that he had fallen over some rocks and had slightly bedded himself by the fall in the hard snow below the ledge.

Smell of the Woods There were times when the hunters were confronted with serious problems. Here is an extract from one of the entries: "Many years' experience has convinced me that the man who carries a gun for pleasure is almost always a gentleman at heart, regardless of the length of his pursuit. There are exceptions, of course, but they are rare. What is the reason? I can't give any; I never met anyone who could; it is so written; it is in the air; it gets into the blood and it stays there; it gives a man kinship with nature; he becomes unafraid even of his solitude."

He tells in one of his diaries of his encounter with a big Alaskan grizzly on a high mountain range and how after a long chase Bruin frequently lying down in the snow the hunters got into a favorable position and finally killed him. This chase was under conditions which tested the endurance of Mr. Meetch and his party, the hunters being almost exhausted through making less of the big bear in his efforts to escape. Bear and men approached each other, which approached each other, continues the entry, "until we were within about 40 yards, coming almost directly toward us. Then I opened the ball. This was a little after 10:30 p. m. a cloudy night and moon shone on the snow which was much darker than it would be and saw only one star. We were on the open snow in which there is never gets very dark during the short summer nights."

At this point the entry refers to the testing of the sights on the guns and he continues: "The chase had lasted more than three-and-a-half hours; we had climbed about 1,000 feet in the deep soft snow with the sharp Berlin Sea wind in our faces, cumbered with heavy rifles, ammunition, field glasses, long rubber boots and such clothing as a man would of necessity be obliged to take when there was likelihood of his being obliged to remain out on the mountain in the snow over night. The snow was soft and deep and I was pretty well done up by the exhausting climb. The bear was coming down hill almost directly toward us, always a bad feature at close quarters, and it was surely a time to do our very best to stop him, disable him, get him down, for the tremendous vitality of this great brute will enable him even after having been mortally wounded to travel several times the intervening space which separated us from him and one blow from his huge paw armed with its cruel claws, would either leave a hunter in a very bad shape at midnight far from warmth and proper care or perhaps more mercifully send him to the twinkling of an eye to the happy hunting grounds over the great divide."

Many Shots Needed Here the diary contains a diagram of the bear and the hunters at the opening of hostilities. "The bear was bers out of the theaters throughout the country where Schubert shows are playing, it was said, that broke the back of the managers' opposition. By singling out one firm of managers the International Alliance of Stage Employees and Motion Picture Operators demonstrated its determination to get at the heart of the opposition. The stage employees and motion picture operators, together with the musicians and other theatrical workers' unions, joined the forces with the actors soon after the latter went on strike to enforce recognition of the Actors' Equity Association, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

At this point the entry refers to the testing of the sights on the guns and he continues: "The chase had lasted more than three-and-a-half hours; we had climbed about 1,000 feet in the deep soft snow with the sharp Berlin Sea wind in our faces, cumbered with heavy rifles, ammunition, field glasses, long rubber boots and such clothing as a man would of necessity be obliged to take when there was likelihood of his being obliged to remain out on the mountain in the snow over night. Services This Afternoon The funeral services were held this afternoon at 2 o'clock from Mr. Meetch's late residence, 1620 North Second street. The Rev. Dr. Robert Bagnell, pastor of Grace Methodist Church, officiated. Burial was made in the East Harrisburg Cemetery, where a detail of Spanish-American War veterans fired a volley over the grave. Taps was sounded by a bugler. The services were attended by many prominent men of the city who had been friends of Mr. Meetch and associates with him for many years in business and political life.

LET 'EM WISH "Well, that's very good of you, but it must cost a pretty penny in the long run." "Nothing of the kind. It doesn't cost anything to wish." Pearson's Weekly.

MORE POLICY THAN HONESTY Two piles of apples lay on the ground. One contains a large-size and rosy selection; the fruit of the other was green and small. "Large on the top, sir, and small at the bottom?" inquired the new assistant of his master, as he prepared to fill the barrel. "Certainly not!" replied the farmer, virtuously. "Honesty is the best policy, my boy. Put the little 'pples at the top and the large ones at the bottom." The assistant complied. His master was evidently as green as his greenest fruit. "The barrel full, my lad?" asked the farmer. "Yes," answered the assistant. "Good!" said the farmer. "Now turn it upside down and label it." -Dallas News.

DAYLIGHT SAVING GAINING IN FAVOR

Officials of Steel Plant endorse Plan For the Borough

Every day sees increasing popularity for the daylight saving plan as proposed for the borough. The scheme is similar to that followed by an increasing number of cities throughout the country. It calls for an hour's advance of the clock for the five summer months, beginning with the last Sunday in April at every year. Unless the plan goes through in Steelton the residents of the borough will lose the extra hour of daylight next summer. And the past two summers have well proved the value of that extra hour of daylight. It has meant increased pleasure in the evening for the autoist, the tennis and baseball players. For the home gardener it has meant a saving of many dollars in the cost of living, in giving him time to work in the garden that otherwise he would not have had.

During the past week or ten days the citizens of Steelton have expressed their feelings in the matter in a most decided way. The officials of the steel plant have been in favor of the plan. The beat and heartiest endorsement, of course, comes from the working-man who is shut up in a mill for the entire day, and who finds in the extra hour of daylight in the evening opportunity for recreation. It is not known whether the resolution will be introduced at the council meeting on Monday evening. It may be held over for the October meeting, but when it is introduced it will in most probability go through. Sentiment throughout the town is in favor of the plan. A number of the members of council have already endorsed the move.
