The German Nationalists voted against signature of the Treaty while some members of the South Tyrolese party abstained from voting. "We raise once more our voices against a peace founded on brute force. As one man we decline the dividing up of our peoples into free and unfree, as is done by this peace. The Misses Westbrook were members of a woman's baseball team along the Rhine, captained by Miss Gertrude Ely, of Philadelphia, who is well known here. The team aroused wild enthusiasm wherever it met the regimental nines, and the only game it lost was to the Third Battalion of the Eighteenth Infantry by a score of 27 to 20, which Captain Ely protested.

The girls attempted to play a trick on one nine by giving them sheath gowns to play in, but the men, knowing they would be unable to run in these, appeared on the field with German skirts of wide proportions.

Isten, Mr. Man! Have you heard the good news? You surely must have, for everyone's talking about it everywhere you go. Only to-day I heard two men in Market street carrying on an animated conversation, all centering about the wonderful new opportunity soon to be presented to the men of this vicinity. The first was saying, "Yes, and they're going to carry nothing but the highest-grade clothing for young men and for men who wish to look young—nothing but the best, remember." Just then a third member joined the little group, "Great Scott, man," he exclaimed, "you're all excited. What's the trouble?" "No trouble at all," indignantly answered the first speaker. "It's a big piece of good luck, that's what it is. Haven't you heard about the new clothing department that McFall's are soon going to open above their present room at Third and Market streets? That's what we're talking about, and so is everyone else."

B ACH year at housecleaning time you run across that great-grandmother made so many years ago. And each year you gaze upon it for a few brief moments, then, carefully folding, place it away in the deep, dark depths of the old chest of drawers. "It seems a pity to keep it in hidding," you say, "but what else can I do?" And so the matter closes. Now, there is a way in which you can exhibit that exquisite sampler or any other kind of dainty needlework as well. Just take it to Saltzgiver's Art and Antique Shop, 223 North Second street, and have it carefully sealed beneath, the glass of a tray. You will be delighted with the result, and surely there is no more practical way of displaying your treasured possession.

A FRIEND of mine—a woman whose profession takes her from city

FRIEND of mine—a woman whose profession takes her from city to city—stopped off in Harrisburg for a few hours one day last week. Now, it so happened that she arrived just at noontime and her first words were: "Oh, I'm nearly starved to death. Please take me to your wonderful Penn-Harris, that I've been hearing so much about." So I did. On arriving, she laughingly exclaimed that she supposed she had chosen a horribly expensive place, but, since she hadn't had a really good meal for so long, she knew I'd forgive her. I smiled, but said nothing until we were seated at the table. When I proceeded to order two 75-cent lunches my friend gasped in absolute dismay at the price and by the time she had completed the delicious repast was almost speechless with delight and surprise. "Truly," she said, as I left her at the station, "I shell never forget that lunch. It was the most satisfying and appetizing one I've had in many 2 weary day, and, as for the price—why, it's too reasonable to be true!"

If there's one thing in this wide, wide world that makes a man disagreeable for an entire day, it's poor coffee at breakfast. Serve him burnt toast, scorched oatmeal or cold potatoes, if you will; but never, never give hm weak, inferior coffee. The good variety, when properly made, allays hunger, exhilarates and refreshes. But the poor brands—! What can I say to properly express my feelings on the matter? Nothing, I fear. But I can and shall issue a word of advice, and here it is: When buying coffee, go to the Grand Unior Tea Company, 208 North Second street; for it is there you will find the superior, delicious brands. And it is there you will also find fair, reasonable prices and a guarantee on everything they sell.
