"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CXXCV.

Leaving Phoebe, the uninvited guest, in full possession of my apartment, I hurried downstairs and on to the nearest drug store where I sought a telephone booth. I called Pat to the Sturges office. Fortunately he was there and I didn't have to ring the Dalton-Sturges Construction Company, where I might have been compelled to speak to Neal and do some explaining. I was anxious to avoid for the time being.

Pat's Irish civility didn't fail, and he promptly acceded to my request that he join me for a taxi-drive and a talk-fest.

Delicacy and diplomacy weren't working very well in the case of Dalton versus Dalton. That was clear. And circumstances had pushed me beyond the limit of endurance. I couldn't bide my time any longer waiting for polite opportunities and openings that never came. If I couldn't talk plainly to Virginia, I felt I must talk plainly to Pat.

So with a do-or-die feeling I hopped into a taxi and whirled down to Pat's office. Then with Pat beside me, I directed the taxi-driver then, without a "by your leave," I opened fire on Pat.

"That night we were at your apartment," he said, sitting up to the thing crab fashion. "What was it you sneaked into your pocket with a sigh of relief, because Jim hadn't seen it?"

"I must go home," I cried. "I'm tired, my ankle— I'm tired." I explained stammeringly. Pat was far too chivalrous to question or protest. He had me driven home at once. But I wouldn't let him take me beyond the elevator, and when I got to my floor, I did a strange thing. I ordered the boy to take me right down again. Then I ordered another taxi and drove off.

It was only five. Virginia might not be home yet. But I would wait. I must see Virginia at once.

known as "Pershing's Own," and composed of two companies from each regiment, division or represented the companies in turn being formed of one squad from each company in the regiment, was a special feature of the parade.

The troops in line represented 47 States of the Union and several of the insular possessions and among the marchers were more than 4,000 "old time" doughboys whose only recorded home is the United States Army. Trudging along under the weight of full combat equipment, every pack in place, rifles clean and bayonets gleaming in the sun, the fighters presented a picture of aggressiveness and force. From 110th street, where the parade started, to the Washington Arch, where it disbanded, the throngs along the curbs kept up almost tumultuous cheering.

TREATY AMENDED FORTY-FIVE TIMES

securing an early opportunity to reap the harvest, in the adjustment of financial obligations of the warring countries.

The third was in the "unthinking outcry of many excellent people who desired early action and for the most part had never read the treaty or never got beyond the words League and treaty, which they believed to mean the establishment of eternal peace."

"To yield helplessly to this clamor," declares the report, "was impossible to those to whom was entrusted the performance of a solemn public duty."

Couldn't Get Data

Recalling the Senate's responsibility as equal with the President, the report recounts at some length the difficulties the Foreign Relations Committee experienced in getting information on the treaty, being obliged to send to Paris for maps, being compelled to get "important information from press reports," and having at its disposal few official documents. Collateral treaties having a bearing, the report says, the committee was unable to get. Of the sum of information received in conference with President Wilson and Secretary Lansing, the report remarks:

"The people themselves know how much information in regard to the treaty was received by the committee upon those occasions."

While criticism for delay has been aimed at the Foreign Relations Committee, the report points out, no action has been taken by France, Japan or Italy. The argument that the treaty speedily should be ratified that trading with Germany might begin, the report dismisses as "rather flimsy" and declares the United States has been trading with Germany since the signing of the armistice in increasing volume. The statement that trade cannot be resumed until the treaty is ratified is characteristic as a "more delusion."

Price of Beef!

"Before leaving this subject," says the report, "it may not be amiss to remark that Mr. Lloyd George has recently made two important speeches expressing grave apprehensions as to the social and political unrest and the economic troubles now prevalent in England. He seems to have failed to point out, however, that the ratification of the covenant of the League of Nations had relieved the situation which he had described. He was apparently equally remiss in omitting to suggest that prompt action by the United States in adopting the covenant of the League of Nations would immediately lower the price of beef."

"The amendment offered by the committee relates to the League. It is proposed to amend the text as to secure for the United States an equal vote in the assembly of the League equal to that of any other power. Great Britain now has under the name of the British Empire one vote in the council of the League. She has four additional votes in the assembly of the League for her self-governing dominions and colonies which are most properly mentioned as separate signatories to the Treaty. She also has the vote of India, which is neither a self-governing dominion nor a colony, but merely a part of the empire and which apparently was simply put in as a signatory and member of the League by the Peace Conference because Great Britain desired it. Great Britain also wields the votes of the Kingdom of Hejaz and Persia. With these last two of course we have nothing to do. But if Great Britain has six votes in the League assembly, no reason has occurred to the committee and no argument has been made to show why the United States could not have an equal number. If other countries like the present arrangement that is not our affair; but the committee failed to see why the United States should have but one vote in the assembly of the League when the British Empire has six.

China Gets Shantung

"Amendments 39 to 44, inclusive, transfer to China the German lease and rights, if they exist, in the Chinese province of Shantung, which are given by the Treaty to Japan. The majority of the committee were not willing to have their votes recorded at any stage in the proceeding in favor of the consummation of what they consider a great wrong. They cannot assent to taking the property of a faithful ally and handing it over to another ally in fulfillment of a bargain made by other powers in a secret treaty. It is a record which they are not willing to present to their fellow citizens or that all domestic and political questions relating to its affairs, including immigration, consular, traffic, the tariff, commerce and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are under this Treaty submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the Council or of the assembly of the League of Nations, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power."

"This reservation speaks for itself. It is not necessary to follow up here all tortuous windings, which to those who have followed them through the labyrinth disclose the fact that the League under this reservation will have power to pass upon and decide questions of immigration and tariff, as well as the others mentioned in the reservation. It is believed by the committee that this reservation relieves the United States from any dangers or any obligations in this direction."

The fourth and last reservation is as follows:

"4.—The United States declines to submit for arbitration or inquiry by the assembly of the League of Nations provides for in said Treaty of Peace any questions which in the judgment of the United States relate to or affect its long established policy, commonly known as the Monroe Doctrine; said doctrine is to be interpreted by the United States alone and is hereby declared to be wholly outside the jurisdiction of said League of Nations and entirely unaffected by any reservation in the said Treaty of Peace with Germany."

"The purpose of this reservation is clear. It is intended to preserve intact the American policy of non-interference or intervention by foreign powers. As the Monroe Doctrine has protected the United States, so will this reservation protect the Monroe Doctrine from the destruction with which it is threatened by the League and leave to the United States alone and in complete control of the United States."

An Overburdened Mother

If the steps a mother takes and the work she does could only be measured by figures, what an array they would make. Through girlhood, wifehood and motherhood woman toils on, often suffering from backache, pain in side, headache, nervousness and sleeplessness, symptoms of more serious ailments peculiar to her sex. Thousands of such women, however, have found relief from suffering by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as is evidenced by the letters of recommendation continually being published in this paper.

PERSHING AND THE FIRST CAPTIVE N. Y.

The flag-decked streets of foreign capitals.

Never in the city's history had such a multitude of spectators turned out for any pageant. It was a holiday for the metropolis, and the broad avenue was lined with the far end of Central Park to Washington Square with dense masses of humanity. Myriads waited for their heroes under leaden skies, when they knelt their heads to the procession. Every window and every roof along the way was packed. Countless thousands were bunched in the eastern edge of Central Park and at least 100,000 sat in the city's grandstand and those erected by speculators.

Army of Heroes

For Pershing it was the culmination of a long series of scenes of adulation. He said he was overwhelmed by the reception given him when he set foot on the shores of Manhattan on Monday, September 2, when that paled into insignificance compared with this to-day. He was the commanding figure in an army of heroes.

As the stern-visaged warrior, sitting on his horse like a centaur, rode through the arch which spans the avenue at One Hundred and Tenth street, he checked which led to the city's grandstand and those erected by speculators.

Proud of the gallant young veterans who marched behind him, the Commander rode slowly down the avenue before hero-worshipping men. The bronzed men who followed were worthy of all the pride their chief could feel. Their regimental flags had never known defeat, and under their chests lay the blood of the Sommes and almost as many more on the Meuse and in the Argonne. The grim roll of casualties is longer than the roster of the division.

Thousands Pay Tribute

Countless thousands of Americans, flushed with the yester of victory, paid tribute here to-day, in what probably was the city's most impressive military spectacle to the nation's leader in the World War. General Pershing, the "commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Force, and to the far-famed First Division.

The sun-burned Missourian, looking as fit as a youthful Indian despite his 59 years—the soldier who said to the shade of Lafayette "his tomb is the spot where Lafayette we are here!" and whose Army of 1,250,000, the largest force of Americans ever to fight on foreign soil, turned the blood of every spectator, and whose victories were the admiration of every Pollu and British Tommy, was General Pershing's guard of honor, a regiment of 3,000 men picked from all seven of the American Regular Army Divisions in France. This unique contingent,
