Richard D. Reemtsma, striking policeman who was shot yesterday morning, died at a hospital last night. According to police officials, Reemtsma was shot by a strikebreaker who thought he was bent on looting his place of business. Robert Lallie also died at a hospital last night, making the seventh death traceable to disturbances during the strike. He was wounded when guards fired into a mob in South Boston last night. About fifty persons are being treated in hospitals for injuries received in riots. Mayor Peters, in a statement, pledged his "loyal, earnest and complete support" to the governor. In the outward aspect of buildings in the center of the city the resemblance to a place besieged, was even stronger than last night. Shop after shop, instead of brilliantly lighted window displays, showed a blank wall. Thousands of feet of lumber had been nailed across the windows before nightfall. But the enemy was within the gates and surging through the streets in hand-to-hand conflict with the defenders. Last night it was as if the foe had been driven out, but the guardians of the town were on the alert for another attack. In places of noisy, jeering crowds in the squares and narrow streets, fighting on all fronts. Before proceeding, Bullitt said he asked Colonel House a number of questions on the American position and House told him, he said, that if the Bolsheviks were ready to stop fighting and declared an armistice the United States would approve. Bullitt was in Russia one week and on his return to Paris sent a report to President Wilson. There was serious discussion of conditions in Russia and the question of withdrawing troops, Bullitt testified, and it was because of this that he was directed to proceed to Petrograd. From Helsinki Bullitt sent confidential telegrams to the President, Secretary Lansing and Colonel House, explaining conditions as he found them, and saying Lenin and others associated with him realized the need of peace. They were ready, he said, to pay their foreign debts. Asked how this information was received by the American mission, Bullitt replied: "Colonel House wrote me a telegram of congratulation, but because it was signed 'House and Mission' it was not sent. The Colonel gave it to me when I got back to Paris."

Fall Opening

Millinery and Wearing Apparel Saturday and all next week Preparations have been most carefully made for the largest and most stunning exhibit of millinery and wearing apparel this store has ever attempted — and the results are most gratifying. An unusually charming array of fall hats are now on display in the millinery department. Their rich elegance of material and making gives them the desired attractive effect to set off your new fall suit or street costume.

The display of Suits, Dresses, Coats, Separate Skirts and Blouses embrace the newest and most stylish models of New York's leading manufacturers; the range of colors, materials and models is most complete.

The Question of Price

This subject is usually overlooked in the average "Fall Opening" advertisement. But not so at the uptown store. We are just as confident of our prices as we are of our merchandise. It is an absolute fact that you can save a $5 bill or more, on any $50 suit you see at these opening displays (and proportionately right through this store). It's a simple problem in arithmetic, on account of our inexpensive location it costs us 10% less to do business than the average store. This saving amounts to something when you start in to buy a new outfit for the Fall season. More people are realizing this all the time. Keep this in mind when you attend this opening tomorrow—and be sure and come—you will be glad to see this lot of new, pretty things.
