

Mackerel Weighing 857 Pounds Drags Heavy Boat

[New York World.] In a three hours' battle with a monster horse mackerel the other afternoon, while fishing, three miles off the beach of Highlands, N. J.,

West Osborne, Conrad Anderson and Charles Wardell, Sea Bright's leading deep sea fishermen, lost their nets, and, in all probability, will not be able to use their skiffs for some time.

The huge fish was snared in Osborne's net. Osborne thought he had a shark, and motioned to Anderson and Wardell, who were lying close by, to work in their nets to keep the big fellow from escaping, because the price paid for sharks on the beach is generous.

The two fishermen, in 22-foot skiffs, turned to their crew men and asked whether they had better take chances with the supposed shark. In the meantime Osborne cried but that the shark was breaking through his net, and begged assistance. Immediately the other two skiffs were brought up and the nets sent over the sides.

Gaff hooks and shark knives were brought quickly into play, but a sudden leap of the sea monster revealed that, instead of a supposed shark, a horse mackerel was their prey. Osborne and the pilots of the other two skiffs prepared harpoons and lines, while the remainder of the crew worked the nets in order to gill and exhaust the monster.

But the swiftly flowing tide was too much for them, and the big fellow broke through the heavy nets. As he was about to escape, having ripped the nets beyond repair, Anderson hurried his steel harpoon into the fish's side. The mackerel immediately went to the bottom, rested a few minutes, then dashed to the surface for more than nine miles. Wardell and Osborne tried to hook on and take up the trail with Anderson, but their skiffs had been damaged when the big fellow's tail ripped off part of their sides.

Nevertheless, Anderson trailed behind for the nine miles. When he was about to tie a buoy at the end of the harpoon line, thinking the big fellow never would give up, he noticed that the line had taken on slack. Playing with the mackerel, he worked closer. The harpoon again was brought into play. This time Anderson drove two into the sides of the fish. They held with telling effect. Finished After 9-Mile Chase This enabled Anderson and his crew to use their knives. They gashed the fish repeatedly. Then another harpoon finished the work, and the big fellow started to settle.

The 41st Anniversary of the founding of the Dives, Pomeroy & Stewart store will probably go down in retail store annals as the most notable value giving occasion Harrisburg ever has known. For almost a full year plans have been in the making for this event, and despite the fact that for months there has been a noticeable shortage of surplus stocks of dependable goods we have been favored from time to time with various fine stocks at very substantial price concessions. In such cases where it was impossible to buy under prevailing market prices we have set Anniversary prices upon our own stocks to a level close to current wholesale costs. Altogether there will appear in the 41st Anniversary Sale two million dollars worth of fine quality merchandise all of it marked at prices which will be a direct help in reducing living costs. The Sale opens tomorrow and continues to the end of the month.
