Missing Since Storm

The Valbenera has been missing since the storm which caught her as she neared Havana enroute from Spanish ports to New Orleans. The passengers are thought to have been almost entirely Spaniards or Cubans, as virtually all of them were to have debarked at Havana. Mrs. Pauline Beckner, of France, sister of Mrs. George Pollock, of New Orleans, was thought to have been abroad. The vessel carried a valuable cargo.

A wrecking crew was to leave here to-day and the naval station here has promised all facilities to add them. Their investigations may establish the presence of bodies of passengers and crew or show they had left the ship before she sank. There have been no reports here, however, of any such number of persons adrift or having been landed, and it was not regarded as probable that any could have been saved by other vessels without word having come of that fact.
