Y dear, I do want to thank you for 'adopting' me during my brief business trip to your city," so ran a letter I received yesterday, "But," the writer continued, "I want still more to shower you with gratefulness for having introduced me to the most delicious coffee p ever drank. Pray, tell me, O fortunate one, where did you discover it and how can I get some, too? Loving coffee as I do, it appealed to me instantly as being the best yet, and my careless failure to ask you the brand has bothered me ever since. Now, please be a good girl and answer me promptly, for I'm waiting anxiously, you know." Contrary to my general rule, I did reply at once, and this is what I said: "Where did I get my coffee? How I do envy the fortunate little person who partakes of his breakfast from the tiny bowl of ivory china and who pours his cream from the miniature pitcher. Being grown up may have its compensations, but it has its drawbacks, too. At least, that's the way one feels when gazing at the cunning chicks and bunnes of vellow and	DR. G. A. In ancient times, mirrors were crude affairs, made, for the most part, of solid, highly-polished metal. Every now and then archaeologists discover just such specimens in old, old tombs and sepulchral vaults. But, since those days, the use of glass has become common, and mirrors are no longer merely reflecting surfaces of metal. Rather, they are things of beauty, used ofttimes for purely ornamental purposes. And, little wonder, when they come in styles as lovely as those found at the Saltzgiver Art and Antique Store, 223 North Second street. Wonderful Colonial mirrors of antique gold, appropriate for the hall, vie in attractiveness with numerous console and mantel mirrors. Indeed, the latter fairly tempt one to build a mantel in every room as an excuse for a place in which to hang to build a mantel in every room as an excuse for a place in which to hang C HARMING witchery of style is woven into the dainty underwear I saw several days ago at the Cloos Shop. Ever since my eyes first rested on those heaps of filmy, lacy things I've anxiously waited the opportunity to tell you about them. And, now that it has come, I scarcely know what to say to make you realize how really exquisite they are. Camisoles, combinations, bloomers and nighties, of georgette, satin and crepe de chine, each one a lovely dream of cobweb lace and pretty ribbons, fill one with an impractical desire to possess them all. That being impossible, we discreetly purchase a few of the many from the amazing assortment offered us. SOMETIMES I wonder whether there is anything under the sun that cannot be found at the sun that cannot be found at the store with samelles to be found in the city. So, the next time your mantle burns out at night, you can immediately set a new one at this store, which is open in the evening. And when I tell you that you are sure of obtaining a Block mantle, made by the latter amount purchasing an Innerline—the best of all. Concert Violiniste 2123 Green St.
