"When a Girl Marries"

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CCCV.

For several days following my first meeting with Val's friends, the Pett-ling Val in showing "the city" to the dear little old lady, I found myself calling "Aunt Mollie" as naturally as if I'd known her since christening days.

Jim struck up a great friendship with Uncle Ned, and we six had the jolliest, most care-free time that has fallen to my lot in ages. It was temporarily interrupted when Uncle Ned invited the four "children"—as he called us—off for a week-end jaunt, and Jim had to resign at the last minute because of business.

That left me with an unoccupied Saturday on my hands, and bethinking myself that I hadn't seen Carlotta for ages, I telephoned her and suggested a luncheon engagement. Hardly had we concluded arrangements when my telephone summoned me to a conversation with some one who felt about me just as I'd been feeling about Carlotta. It was Anthony Norreys clamoring for a sight of his long unseen friend.

"If Jim can finish an important business deal we're going out of town to-morrow and join some friends. And we've plans for to-night. That leaves this afternoon. I'm lunching with Carlotta Sturges. Want to pick me up for a walk about three?"

"Why are you dooming me to a solitary lunch, Anne?" asked Tony in his delightful voice. "I'd like nothing better than to join you and that nice Sturges girl for lunch, provided, always that you beg and implore."

"I beg and implore," I replied. "It will be jolly to have you with us. I know Carlotta will like seeing you again."

After I'd said good-by and had hung up the receiver, I wondered why I'd said that. As a matter of fact, I couldn't remember that Carlotta had ever mentioned Anthony Norreys since the old Canteen days when he dropped in on us so often. And except for these casual meetings they had nothing in common. I'd never heard Carlotta comment on Tony, but I felt sure that no one could mind having him brought in to break up a tete-a-tete. On the other hand, Tony had once called Carlotta "a brick."

I got to the place of our appointed meeting five minutes ahead of time, but there was Carlotta, over-prompt, too.

"I was so anxious for a glimpse of you, Nancy-Anne, that I came ahead of time, for fear I'd waste a minute," she cried effervescently, dubbing me with a new title to suit her mood and the propitious occasion.

"You dear thing!" I replied, squeezing her hand and hoping she wouldn't mind my dragging in a third without consulting her. "But we aren't going to be all by our ourselves. Do you mind?"

"Why, no," said Carlotta politely, but with no great show of interest. "Any one you want is sure to be welcome."

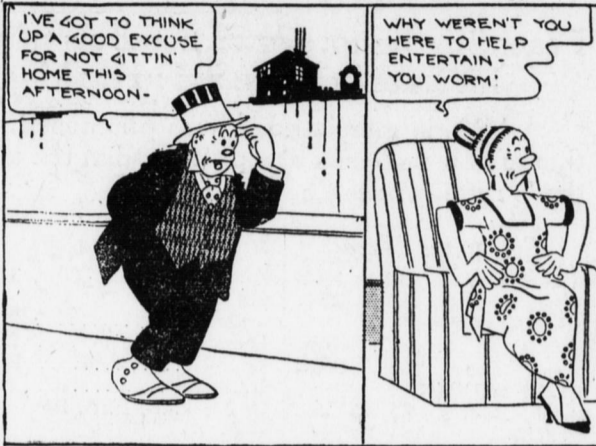

"I knew I could count on you to be polite and a good sport, too," I replied. "But here comes our third man, and he's sure of a welcome of his own wherever he goes—it's dear old Tony."

In the moment before Tony had finished greeting me and had turned to Carlotta I got a queer impression that she started and paled under her crimson cheeks. But by the time I turned to address her, Carlotta had herself again—a little flamboyant, a trifle overheard, but warmly sincere for all that.

"Have you time to let me whisk you up the road for a cool hour or two at the inn on the river bank?" asked Tony.

"Please—please don't let me keep

Bringing Up Father

"I've got to think up a good excuse for not getting home this afternoon—"

"Why weren't you here to help entertain— you worm!"

"Now let me explain—"

"I'm sorry I spoke so harshly—"

"I just couldn't get away. The count insisted on me going on his yacht. An I couldn't phone on board."

"The butcher was in dinky Moore's when you was there so he picked it up an' brought it here."

"Give me that—"

LITTLE TALKS BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX

The other morning as a street car was carrying a full quota of workers to the marts of trade, something happened to the power or the brake, and the car stopped.

A pretty blonde girl who had been languidly hanging to a strap immediately showed signs of interest, she glanced about the car, studied her immediate group of strap-hangers, like a vaudeville artist ingratiating himself with the audience before beginning his turn.

She had the pretty droopy type of blondness that suggests a "second-day rose" which has been wired, lashed to a tooth-pick and made to hold up its head in a brave attempt to give it the freshness it has lost on the florist's counter. She began:

"If this limousine has broken down, I am late again, making three times this week I have got a scowl from the boss. If this bright young working girl don't look out she'll get fired."

A middle-aged man looked at her indignantly, a flogging in a straw hat smiled. A lady of uncertain age who suggested the cook-book stencil; "bring the vinegar to boiling point" sniffed at the sufficient understanding came to me—then all the little things that had puzzled me for the last hour became suddenly clear.

"No, I don't see much of Pat Dalton any more," she was saying. "He's on his feet now—doesn't need my friendship as he did. And the business is right in his hands—that doesn't need any supervision as it did."

"You sound wistful," Tony replied. "Surely you don't think you could ever be useless or forgotten. There would always be a place for any one of your deep sympathies anywhere."

"No, I don't see much of my friend," replied Carlotta, and her voice was wistful indeed. "But I'm grateful for what you've been saying. Coming from so loyal a friend of Anne's it means more than I can tell you."

And then, like a flash, some words of Carlotta's came back to me. Grim Little, said little words of Carlotta that there was a man—a man she could love and idolize, but that she had no right to try to win him and that he didn't know she was on earth, because there was another woman claiming his attention. Something in her intent eyes made me feel that Anthony Norreys was the man—HER MAN to Carlotta.

But who was the other woman, the woman who needed Tony?

U. S. MARINES NEAR FIUME

American Contingent Lands at Buccari, Newspaper Announces

Rome, Friday, Sept. 19.—The Giornale D'Italia announces that an American contingent has landed at Buccari, in the Fiume region.

The Tribune announces to-day that a person returning from Fiume stated that General Badoglio, in charge of the Italian troops outside Fiume, had granted a delay of 48 hours to officers and soldiers in Fiume to return to Italy. It was added that the population of Fiume had decided to make an unmistakable demonstration of their feelings at the expiration of this ultimatum Saturday. Women and children and men of the civil population were to precede the troops to the armistice line, shielding the troops with their bodies in order to see whether General Badoglio's soldiers would fire on them.

It was added that D'Annunzio had ordered the sentinels on the Jugoslav frontier not to make use of their arms, even if the Jugos-Slavs fired on them, saying: "Allow yourselves to be killed: We are here for this, since our sacrifice may lead to the occupation of all of Dalmatia."

The Tribune says its informant added that some French and British sailors had remained in Fiume and joined the Italian movement.

Clear your complexion completely with Resinol Soap

If you find yourself "left out" because of a poor skin, and want a clear, fresh complexion, use Resinol Soap at least once a day. Wash thoroughly with a warm, creamy lather of it, then rinse the face with plenty of cold water. It does not take many days of such regular care with Resinol Soap to show an improvement. In severe cases, a little Resinol Ointment should be used at first. All druggists sell Resinol Soap and Ointment.

The Harrisburg Academy HARRISBURG, PA.

Founded in 1784 and chartered in 1809, The Harrisburg Academy has maintained an uninterrupted corporate existence. For several years the school has graduated twenty-five to thirty young men, all of whom have continued their studies in a score of more of universities and professional schools. The school prospers for its 136th year of service with the strongest teaching staff and the largest enrollment. There will be no military uniforms used this year. Calisthenics and outdoor sports will be substituted in the place of military drill. Buildings are open for inspection and classification of pupils. The prospectus for 1919-20 is sent upon request.

British Interests Watching American Exporters of Coal

London, Sept. 22.—British industrial interests view with alarm the gaining of a foothold by American exporters in the coal market of France and Denmark. Industrial disputes in Great Britain have given American dealers an opportunity to obtain huge orders in quarters formerly supplied exclusively by South Wales mines.

American dealers are said to have contracted for the delivery of over 100,000 tons of coal in France and Denmark as sample shipments, orders for which were placed last March during the strike in England, it is said. The price was said to be $2.50 per ton lower than the English price at that time.

The iron and steel industries of England also are said to feel their outlook is not very hopeful because of opportunities afforded American competitors through the curtailed English coal production.
