

CAPTAIN MARTZ, WHO LEFT HERE IN 1858, IS BACK IN THE CITY AS A VISITOR

Captain Benjamin F. Martz, Civil War veteran and plianman of the early seventies, is in Harrisburg again for the first time since he pulled out from here in 1858. The captain is visiting his brother, Adam Martz, 512 Woodbine street, who has been boss wrecker of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in the Harrisburg district for many years.

Captain Martz, for years a subscriber to the Telegraph and a good, staunch Republican of the old school, was around yesterday afternoon to see the newspaper. As a boy he used to go to school in Walnut street, and was familiar with the old order of things in this city.

"I went to that Walnut street school when I was just a little fellow," said the captain, and some of my school fellows at that time were Don Cameron, Joseph Sayford, Levi Alricks and John Kunkle. I guess they're all dead now, though, and I probably wouldn't remember them if I saw them. Jacob F. Eyster was a teacher at the school then, and a fellow named Connolly.

"Harrisburg sure has changed some since I was last here," he said. "I did expect I was going to get back but I'm awful glad I'm here. Going to stay for your celebration, too, and ride with the boys of Post 83. This game leg I got from a fall at Vicksburg. Was in the hospital nine months with it."

The captain was in Philadelphia for a time after leaving Harrisburg and then went to St. Joe, from which place he drove a herd of 60 head across the plains to Denver. Shortly after that he came back to Iowa at the outbreak of the Civil War, and was commissioned captain of Company D, Thirty-sixth Iowa Infantry, commanded by Colonel Blake, later Governor of that State. Wounded at Vicksburg, the captain spent nearly a year in a hospital and then went West again. He was assigned then as a captain to the Third Regular Infantry and for two years was with them fighting the Indians, under General Carlton.

In later years he has been living at Missouri, Mont., a town of over 15,000 which Captain Martz declares is one of the liveliest and most up-to-date spots in the West. One of his four sons is an editor of a Missouri paper.

The captain will be here for some time. Later he expects to go back to Missouri.

HELEN KELLER IN MOVIES TELLS OF EXPERIENCE

Helen Keller is in the movies. "You can watch her story unfold in 'Deliverance,' see her as a little child, stumbling, speechless, unable to hear her mother's voice calling her indoors, the pathos does make your heart ache. But when you see her, keen, alert, happy, interested, in everything in the world, her buoyancy creeps into your own blood."

"I am afraid I look much more beautiful on the screen than I really am," she said, sitting beside Mrs. Anne Sullivan Macy, her companion and teacher for 39 years. It was the day after I had seen 'Deliverance,' and I scarcely knew what questions to ask first. With Mrs. Macy speaking rapidly through her marvelous fingers, Miss Keller's replies came so quickly that it was impossible to feel strange and awkward.

"I am just myself on the screen," Miss Keller said. "They told me what to do and I remembered the directions and did what they had said. Of course the director or Mrs. Macy could not come before the camera to add instructions, so I had to keep my mind very keenly concentrated on my movements. I did not want them to be ashamed of me as an actress," she laughed. "I have always enjoyed the movies with Mrs. Macy's help. I enjoy Charlie Chaplin's wit, and he can be so pathetic too, at times," she added.

"Someone told me the other day that my story on the film was as great a piece of American literature as Uncle Tom's Cabin or Black Beauty. I was very pleased with this, especially the last comparison. I loved that story and I named a pony Black Beauty after I had read the book."

"You see my story is real. Except for that part about Nadja in the screen version everything is true. I learned to spell the word 'water' with my fingers just the picture shows you. And I learned to speak with the fingers on my throat and lips in just that way. People talk to me so often about my courage in going through college. But it wasn't so brave, really. I wanted to know. I wanted to be able to think about everything that a man's brain recognized. And I still do. Don't it?" she appealed to Mrs. Macy.

"I read the papers and watch the world. This restless condition sometimes makes me very sad, but I can see that it is necessary. People are using their emotions more than their minds these days," she remarked thoughtfully.

She broke off to say something to her secretary, who was busy opening letters, telephoning, trying to save Miss Keller a few of the countless intrusions upon her time.

"Polly (that is Miss Thompson, my secretary) is a great comfort to me. She knows how to be polite and firm, without offending people who want me to make addresses. I love speaking in public, but it is rather a strain."

There have been other splendid seekers after knowledge, but, with a few exceptions, they have all bent their eyes for study and their ears to hear patient explanations. Helen Keller's wanting to know is the thing that makes her a superb woman, not merely a clever one triumphing over physical difficulties.—Katharine Lane, in the New York Mail.

HIS OWN VOICE STUMPED HIM

Hercot Ward, whose death is announced, had a curious experience when in Brussels, when the exhaustion was on in that city. It was years after his wanderings on the Congo. In the exhibition grounds one evening he ran into a party of Bannala, brought over from Africa as objects of curiosity, and was immediately recognized by several of them, who simultaneously hailed him with his native name, "Nkumbi." He found himself spontaneously replying in their language—one of several Congo tongues he had learned—but at the same time whenever he was conscious of the sound of his own voice uttering his strange sounds, he found himself stumped.—London Morning Post.

Doing Something About It

Mark Twain once said that "the weather" is talked about more than any other subject, yet nobody seems to do anything about it. "Service" is something like that; everybody talks about it, but very few do anything about it. We're doing something. We're giving you the best merchandise on the market and we're backing it with a "reinforced concrete" guarantee of satisfaction or money back.

Did you ever hear anyone say they could furnish good references?—and almost anybody can get quite a few of them if they take the time and trouble to do it, but wouldn't you rather prove that you are worthy and equal to the occasion than have a whole bushel basket of recommendations? Promises very often are soon forgotten, but when you come to this "Live Store" and spend your well earned money, we see to it that you get all that you expect for that money. We "back up" all we agree to do. We have been selling on this basis ever since we started in business.
