"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LITTLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CCCXI
Eagerly I whirled home from my first visit with Aunt Mollie and Uncle Ned. I was convinced that I'd only have to search my peignoir to find the missing ring and the ugly mystery which had clouded the past nine days.

On my arrival, Hedwig greeted me with two messages. One was from Phoebe, asking that I telephone her as soon as I came in. The other was that Bertha had called me over the wire three times and would call again at 6 o'clock.

In spite of the fact that my eagerness to speak to Phoebe brooked no delay, I raced to the phone and called Phoebe.

"Oh, Anne, I want to see you," she cried, almost tearfully. "I simply can't go on like this. Virginia hardly notices me and indeed she's never here to speak to me. She's out all the time with Sheldon Blake, and when she's in she's so grim now, bidding that I hardly dare speak to her!"

"Phoebe, dear, what is there to do?" I asked, feeling impudently that I was helpless in the face of any problem that included Virginia.

"Let me come over and stay with you," begged Phoebe. "But how can I dear?" I asked. "In Virginia's present reckless mood she mustn't be alone. If she's going to race around with Sheldon perhaps all that saves her from her cruellest criticism is the fact that you are there in the house with her. Aren't you brave enough to stay—and protect Jamie from herself and the world?"

"Oh, if you put it that way I suppose I must," Phoebe said.

Even while thanking Phoebe for that I had hit on the magic word to persuade Phoebe to remain with Virginia. I wondered if it would last. But I had another problem now. I hurried to the closet where my orchid peignoir hung. With trembling fingers I dragged it out and went over to the light of my bird west window. Something struck against my ankle as I carried the filmy mass across the room, and a great wave of joy surged to my heart at the impact. The ring—it couldn't

Her face was flushed—her eyes bright. Her head was flung high in defiance. She was panting the way a frightened bird does when it falls from its nest. All in a gasp her words tumbled over each other. "Anne—I've had my first happy day to-day. I lived it at Mr. Mason's. But I can't go back. You told him I was honest. I—I can't go back. I've come to let you do whatever you think best with me."

Her head sank. Her voice trailed off to a whisper. She stood before me abject and pitiful, and in the palm of her hand she held toward me my pearl ring.

Howard O. Holstein, of this city, who was running mate with Judge Eugene C. Bonniwell on the Democratic primary ticket last year and at present a candidate for county commissioner, will be a candidate for president of the State Firemen's Association with the backing of the delegates from Dauphin and nearby counties. He also favored an amendment to the constitution limiting the president to one term. Judge Bonniwell has been president several times and he and Mr. Holstein have been warm personal friends.

The two girls from this city who received freshman honors were Miss Frances Hause and Miss Nancy McCullough, both members of the '18 class at Central.

A number of members of the East Harrisburg W. C. T. U. assembled at the Vernon school for the purpose of presenting a picture of Miss Willard. The program was in charge of Mrs. Rollison, superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction. The pupils sang several patriotic songs and gave incidents in the life of Miss Willard.

Miss Rynard, principal of the school responded, expressing the pleasure and gratification of teachers and pupils at receiving the gift.

Those were employed in the yards, no attempt being made to start work in the plant. The Rogers-Brown and the Donner plants were closed.
