PROHIBITION IN

Rio De Janeiro, Brazil, Oct. 6, — Should prohibition ever become ef-fective in Brazil, it is probable that few Brazilians would be greatly af-fected by it. The Brazilian appar-ently does not care for strong drink. Coffee is the national beverage and the coffee shops are among the interesting sights of the city. They are to be found everywhere, but are especially numerous in the down-town section and along the princi-pal evenues.

price equivalent to about 2½ cents a cup. It is in these shops and while sip-ping their coffee that many Brazil-ians discuss business or social af-fairs, and also watch the passing throngs. Many of the shops remain open all night and are well patron-ized. In fact some of them contain more patrongs at 2 a. m. than at any other time. Nearly all of the coffee shops carry an abundant stock of alcoholic liquors, but there is little call for it.

ONLY ONE SHOT FIRED

ONLY ONE SHOT FIRED By Associated Press. Rome, Sunday Oct. 5.—According to reports received by the ministry of the navy only one shot was fired at the steamer Epiro when she was en-tering winding channel leading to Cattaro last week. This shot, it is said, was fired by a Serbian volunteer from the rock of Rondoni, situated on an island in the channel. Italy has secured the punishment of the guility sailor and the substitution of Serbian regular troops for volunter sailors as guards of the forts along the chan-nel.

SMALL FUEL RESERVE By Associated Press. Rome, Oct. 5. — Discussing the coal crisis in this country, the news-paper Tempo says Italian railroads have fuel for only one month, and this is almost entirely American. A piling of a great reserve of Ameri-can coal is being hampered by the strike in the harbor of Genoa, where 18 steamers laden with coal arrived several weeks ago and still await unloading.
