During the home room festivities periods this week the hero story is the idominant theme. Tuesday the student presidents asked the memstudent presidents asked the members of their respective classes "Who are your heroes? Why do you choose these men and women? What qualities in your heroes and heroines do you admire?"

As usual the names of Washington and Lincoln were given, but names associated with heroic service in the World War were often mentioned.

slopes of Short Mountain and that it will be brought into the borough next week.

The boulder weighs nearly tentons, Mr. Seller believes and is particularly suitable for a memorial shaft. It is massive and covered with moss. As nearly as possible, it will be allowed to remain in its natural state. It is planned to smooth three sides to allow bronze tablets, bearing the names of Dauphin and nearby veterans of the Great War, veterans of the Civil War and a record of welfare and Liberty Loan contributions on the third.

By the time the boulder is brought to the borough, it is believed that the tablet committee, consisting of F. C. Gerberich and Charles E. Shaffer, will have secured estimates on the approximate cost of bronze with the inscriptions. From these the budget can be estimated and a drive for funds launched. It is believed that the canvass for funds will be started about the middle of next week. The names of all nearby veterans will be on it.

GREAT SCHOOL BUILDING AHEAD

est Construction Year in School History Is Due

and at present necessitated by the unusual number of plans for new construction of schools being submitted to the Department of Public Instruction, Dr. Thomas E. Finegan, the new State Superintendent, says that he feels justified in assuring school boards and school officials generally that where additional school housing accommodations are necessary in order not to interfere with the work of the schools or not to delay the progressive educational activities of a school district, the new building should not be delayed on account of prevailing prices. Studies of prices and conditions have led to the conclusion that present prices will in all probability continue to dominate the situation indefinitely.

this country are low in many instances compared with prices elsewhere.

Plans and specifications for new and reconstructed school buildings amounting to over $5,000,000 in value have been submitted to the department for examination and approval since the signing of the armistice almost a year ago, a remarkable impetus in new building projects having been noted. During the war building operations were virtually suspended by school districts and as a result what is termed "an abnormal, over-crowded condition" now exists in many districts. Dr. Finegan says that the numerous requests for a State survey of local school conditions, the large number of applications for recommendations and suggestive plans for new buildings and the plans being received almost daily indicate one of the largest school building years in the history of the State is at hand regardless of the prices now prevailing. The State school authorities do not regard the conditions at the end of the Civil War and now as analogous.

State food agents are trying to locate the source of some "bleached flour" being sold in Pennsylvania, one sample in seventy-seven taken recently having been found to be "bleached" by some process which state food agents would like to know more about. No plant has been located in this State which is equipped with the apparatus and it is thought that it came from outside. Ever since the veto of the bill to permit the sale of flour chemically treated, the State food agents have been on the trail of the flour sales and numerous samples have been taken without finding any "bleached" product until recently when seventy-seven were taken within forty-eight hours and one sample discovered to be treated against the law.

State raids on concerns selling London, Oct. 10 .- Premier Lloyd deorge's announcement of the sus ension of Board of Trade licensing restrictions on the importation of American automobiles was the result of an increasing preference on the part of English motorists for the American cars quite as much as the urgency of increased motor transport veyance.

Formerly in England there was considerable prejudice against American made motor cars. This prejudice is now ascribed either to ignorance of their true worth or to snobbery One contributor to a British motor

The point at the moment, however, is not exactly one of sheer value, but whether, in our own best interests in the long run, we should admit the vehicles freely, ration their import, or bar them altogether.

"At the present time there is a desperate shortage of motors in this country. Our own manufacturers, owing chiefly to circumstances over which they have no control, are unable to meet the demand and so, to some extent, we benefit immediately by importing motor vehicles from the United States.

"At the same time, the fact remains that the American factories cannot, for a considerable time, meet even their own demands, yet they are willing to keep their own market short in their attempt to consolidate and increase their foreign markets. There is ample food for thought in this fact."

Are You Watching the Bread Your Family Eats?

You will probably say to yourself: "well, no, not in particular.'

As a matter of fact you should be very particular to keep strict account of the quality of the bread your family eats.

All bread is not alike.

All bread cannot be alike because all bakers do not bake bread alike, nor do they use the same kind of materials.

For your health, as well as for our business, we make the best bread possible to make. In the first place a baker owes it to the community in which he lives to give the people the best bread possible to make.

In the second place it is good business to make the finest quality bread, because, after all, the housewife is the judge of the bread eaten by her family and she naturally will stick to the kind of bread that is the best quality.

It is, of course, obvious that you cannot tell what the quality of bread is by looking at it or by tasting it. You must depend upon the in-tegrity of the baker who makes the bread.

There is nothing in

but what you would put into bread yourself if you baked your own bread.

We do not use any kind of flour at all, nor do we base our decision upon the price of that flour.

We know what is the best flour and we pay the price to get it. We buy the best grade of yeast, the best quality of milk and we mix our dough in the proper proportions to make bread that is recognized as the best from all points of view.

Bricker's O. K. Bread is delicious, it does not dry out quickly, it is nutritious, it is baked thoroughly on the outside and baked thoroughly on the inside.

Bricker's O. K. Bread is a good size family loaf. It is as large as possibly can be made with the flour we use at the popular price per loaf.

Its flavor pleases, its quality satisfies.

Mr. Vickerman in his address praised Governor Sproul for his stand on ratification during the last session of the State Legislature, saying that Pennsylvania would never have ratified the prohibition Federal amendment, but for the support given by the Governor. He also presented to the federation a plan which contemplates the active participation of every churchman in the State through the federation in the elecion of "dry" members to the House and Senate for the next session.

Herman L. Collins has this interesting note in Girard's column of the Philadelphia Press about two eminent college cronies who are still close friends: "Still running strong in parallel grooves, Governor Sproul and United States Attorney General A. M. Palmer will next week be summoned to Lafayette to get what is coming to them and what is their due to wit, a degree of doctor of laws. It is no use once more to call attention to the Castor-Pollux roles played by these eminent Quaker sons of Swarthmore College. They were classmates and fraternity brothers. One was best man at the other's wedding, but whether on that occasion it was "Bill" or "Mitch" who was the groom I've now forgotten. One a State Senator for over twenty years and the other a Congressman, one a Governor of his State and the other Attorney General of the United States, both big mentally as well as stalwart physically, alike as Damon and Pythias in all save politics, Sproul and Falmer have come down the race course in fine style and right together. President? Well, all I can say is that both the Republican and the Democratic party has had candidates who did not match either of them in brain or principle."
