COMING SLOWLY President Wilson Permitted More Cases Reported Than England and Japan to Gobble Supply

A well-known Harrisburg manufacturer has sent the following letter to his salesmen explanatory of the sugar shortage, and showing it to be largely due to the refusal of President Wilson to heed the request of sugar dealers to look after the interests of the United States two months ago, instead of permitting England and Japan to corner the supply:

Virtually All Mechanics in Five Shops Are Now Out on Strike

The trouble started on Wednesday when the mechanics at the Altoona enginehouse quit work because they objected to the appointment of an assistant foreman from the Hollidaysburg shop. Yesterday in response to the call of the leaders of the shop crafts, which include machinists, boilermakers, blacksmiths, sheet metal workers, electricians and carmen, approximately 10,000 men walked out in sympathy with the mechanics. Others were expected to join the strikers' ranks to-day. The decision to call a general strike, union leaders said, was reached after all efforts to adjust the difficulty with railroad officials had failed. About 300 special duty men, minor bosses, who are ordinarily distributed along the system, have been brought here to take the place of the strikers and others were expected to-day. A number of railroad policemen also are here, but there has been no disorder and they have not been placed on duty. Pickets are stationed at all shop gates. Meetings of the strikers, it was announced by the city authorities, would not be disturbed. The Mayor has accepted the offer of the union men to assist in preserving order and some of them were acting as traffic officers to-day.

So far the walkout has not interfered with traffic, but officials of the company said there may be serious interruption, both in passenger and freight service, should the strike continue.
