Mayor Keister Joins With
Army Vocational Board

Mayor Daniel L. Keister is a busy man these days, but he has decided to take up another duty. Yesterday the Mayor announced he would join hands with the Federal Board for Vocational Education. The latter is desirous of coming in contact with every veteran of the Great War who suffered a disability resulting in a handicap which will require vocational re-education to overcome it. The Mayor said to-day:
"I am going to co-operate with the Board to see that every veteran who is entitled to vocational rehabilitation under the law, is given a clear understanding as to the opportunity presented. I have sent for all the data they may give me, and will welcome any soldier who needs attention along this line.
"I have seen a busy man, and have many important matters ahead that must get my attention, but I am not too busy that I cannot give some of my time to soldiers who seek vocational education. If there are any in Harrisburg or vicinity who desire to be rebuilt and fitted for some vocation that will earn them a livelihood, all they must do is to let me know their name and address and I will get in touch with the Vocational Board at once."
There are many soldiers who, it is believed do not know of the opportunities offered by the Government to educate them and Mayor Keister is anxious to do his part to get the necessary information to these soldiers. He is in correspondence with the Board at Washington and will be glad to help any soldier. If they will call or send in their name and address, the Mayor will take up their respective cases.
