TECHNICAL SIDE OF TEACHING IS BEING EXPLAINED

Personal Element in Instruction Said to Play a Large Part in Education

Some suggestive projects for the rural schools were put forward this morning by Miss Mabel Carney, of Columbia University, in one of the section meetings of the Dauphin County Institute held in Zion Lutheran Church. Miss Carney suggested that the interest of their pupils might be held more easily and their instruction be simplified if local objects were used in the problems presented.

For instance, said Miss Carney if

Dr. Graves told the following story in support of his contention that too often the teacher's physical or mental condition reflects itself in the mark poor ask a boy how many cows there might be left in his father's fields from a flock of fifty if ten of them were to break down the fence and get away, he would be much more interested in picturing that idea than he would be in simply trying to subtract ten from fifty. It is a matter of appeal to the imagination, according to Miss Carney, and both teachers and pupils will find the way much easier and more productive if they will follow that sort of scheme in their teaching.

Dr. George A. Mirick spoke to the lower grade teachers on "Methods of instruction," while Dr. George H. Betts addressed the six upper grades on "Measures of Method." Dr. Betts irrged a greater uniformity in teach—

Beginning his lecture, Dr. Graves said that modern degrees of all kinds are no longer a rue gauge of a man's capacity and intelligence. There are too many standards for degrees of the same kind, and where one man in one university or school might get a bachelor's degree, which would reflect credit on him and his alma mater, another man in the same university would receive the same degree and in later years prove himself to be absolutely undeserving of it. Altoona, Oct. 16.—The Chamber of Commerce at its noonday luncheon was addressed by E. J. Stackpole, of Harrisburg, who met many old friends among the businessmen of this city. He is a native of the Juniata Valley and in his opening remarks recalled some of his earlier experiences along the Blue Juniata.

Mr. Stackpole told of the progress of Harrisburg as a result of community co-operation and a sustained public interest in the welfare of the city, and praised the officials of his home city for their co-operation and a sustained method in the very one of the great public improvement projects of recent years. He said it mattered little as to the form of government of a municipal type dedicated to the best interests of the community. He felt that Harrisburg had been particularly fortunate in maintaining a high degree of public loyalty and unselfish interest in the things that make for municipal progress.
