Calcium is one of the numural constituents of the human body. Your skin requires it to be healthy. It invigorates the skin health, dries up the pimples, boils and blotches, enables healthy skin of the fine texture to form and become clear, pinkish, and smooth. This display of color was one of the things which made my youthful venture into entomology, so fascinating. I used to chase colored bectles, which seemed to me miracles of unbelievable beauty, The family of the little spotted-backed "ladybug," or ladybird (Coeduellidae), can show you such a series ofgem elike forms as no art could match. And the other insects besides the bectles are no loss chomatically wonderful,

LIQUOR BAN

Congressman Rainey Introduces Bill to Repeal War-

Washington, Oct. 17.—A final move to lift the ban on intoxicating liquor was made by Representative John W. Rainey, Democrat, of Illinois. He introduced a bill to repeal wartime prohibition.

peal wartime prohibition.

Mr. Rainey said the Attorney General told him the wartime act is mandatory, and that until both peace with Germany is declared and demobilization of the army is completed the President is without power to issue such a proclamation.

In view of this opinion Mr. Rainey now proposes to make one last effort to have Congress follow President Wilson's recommendation for ending the drought at once. He realizes the bill must be referred to the Judiciary committee, which has a majority against repeal of wartime

Scientific Discussions by Garrett P. Serviss

When I was a boy I lived in the country—that is to say, the world was mine. Only the country boy is acquainted with the inhabitants, and the ways of life, of this planet; the city boy is aware merely of its human beings. Among my most interesting acquaintances were the beetles, Coleoptera, (How that Greek name fascinates me yet.)

ptera, (How that Greek name fascinates me yet.)

In my explorations on the magic shelves of the "book-case" had found a couple of volumes on entomogy. I cared nto a rap for the "science," but the woodcuts and the fairyland descriptions of life in that wonderful world under my feet took me by storm.

I became a mighty hunter. The flower garden was my tropic zone; the fields were teeming continents; the woods were regions of mystery haunted by curious monsters that I was afraid curious monsters that I was afraid tuoch; the foot-path to the school use was a Roman military road where aesar's legions sometimes marched in he guise of columns of ants, or where a the guise of columns of ants, or where a gorgeous Darius, or Mithridates, playing that he was only a jewel-armored cincindela beetle, darted out of the grassy forest bordering the path, and appeared so dazzlingly scintillant in the sunshine that I was as fierce to capture him as if he had been a living diamond. But always he had the legs and the spring of an athlete. There were not many of his brilliant family that got imprisoned on my pepper box—abstracted from my pepper box—abstracted from kitchen under scientific requisition. More facile to capture, but lacking in the spectacular, was the scavenger scarab beetle, disrespectfully called "tumble bug," indifferent to bystanders and batentous of dide on-lookers, industriously rolling his ball, bigger than himself, keeping it going, and heaving up his round back with hard pushing one more reminiscence or my early entomological campaigns and then I will explain the purpose of this writing My most startling experience was with the big "elaters," long-bodied beetles, two inches in length, gray-black with rows of pale-yellow points down the back, and with the front and head covered bya dark shield on which are two huge, staring, oval, velvet-black spots encircled with yellow rings, so eye-like that they make you jump. My first meeting with an elater was on the trunk of a button-ball tree, alone in the woods. He looked to my startled eyes "as big as an elephant." I did not know what hew as, for there was no picture of him in my book. But knew he was an insect, and a rare one at least for me), and my resolution to have him in my pepper-box never walvered, notwithstanding.

knew he was an insect, and a rare one at least for me), and my resolution to have him in my pepper-box never walvered, notwithstanding my innate fear of the extraordinary beast.

Besides, in spite of the ominous "eyes," there was the attraction of a singular beauty about his shapely form and aristocratically tasteful coloring. I spread my hand cautiously over him and grabbed. He emmitted a click that sounded to me, in that exciting moment, as loud as the crack of a pistol, and there was a violent concussion against the palm of my hand. He had "elated" himself with a vengeance, and I dropped him and looker at my hand. There was no harm done except the shock to my nerves.

Presently I espied another specimen on the same tree, and him I captured triumphantly. The trick of the elater is to snap a kind of horn-spring on the under side of its thorax in such a way as to project the insect bodily into the air. This is its way of getting on its feet when overturned.

I recall these things because of the opportunity open to every intelligently curious youngster to make personal acquaintances in the insect world which will amuse him and give him useful thoughts during all the remainder of his life. Then, too, the great natural history museums have now reached a point of development where they can almost supply the place of the outdoor world for those who have the desire, but not the time, to go in search of such things amid their natural environment.

There is, for instance, in the American Natural History Museum, freely open to the inspection of anybody wise enough to take advantage of the opportunity, a truly wonderful collection of bectles. They have there a "beetle spectrum," which consists of an arrangement of those insects so chosen that they show, in the proper order, nearly all the colors and shades of color from the red to the violet of the solar spectrum.

This display of color was one of the things which made my youthful venture
