CHAPTER CXXXVIII
 On the morning after the birthday dinner, which Phoebe and Neal gave me, I wrapped up the blue crepe de chine dress and marched down to Tom Mason's new uptown office with it. I couldn't decide which of two motives actuated me; I gave it up as a bad job and got into action without insisting on analyzing the why and wherefore of that action.

On the one hand, I felt sure that I was taking the dress back to Daisy solely and simply because I wanted her to have it, and to have the assurance it would bring that I wished to be friends with her as of yore. On the other hand, I knew I was curious to see how she'd explain the peculiar actions of herself and Tom Mason the night before. Why they fairly sneaked away without recognizing me, I couldn't understand.

"Oh, Mrs. Harrison this is nice!" gushed Daisy as she glided forward to meet me on my arrival at the studio, of which she was in charge.

"She had what I should call her best saleswoman manner, and I reverted to calling me 'Mrs. Harrison.' That gave me my opening.

"Why not Anne?" I asked.

"Do I call you Anne? I mean may I? That's so sweet of you. And I can't tell you how much I appreciate your coming here to see me. It was to see me!" she asked with a meaningless formality from which an effort at warmth and intimacy must slide off like water from high glazed Chinese pottery.

"It's to see you, Daisy," I said, continuing my efforts to get below the surface to the fine feelings she had revealed the day she returned my ring.

"That's sweet," she said again. "Perhaps you will look about a bit and wait until my assistant returns to Mr. Mason comes in. Then I'll

CHAPTER LXXI

(Copyright, 1919, Star Company)

Why had Desiree Leighton been unwilling to meet him when she was visiting his aunt?

That was the question that tormented David DeLaine for several hours after he had left the lawyer's office.

A few days ago the problem would have affected him much less than it did now. To-day, with the knowledge that he was a man of independent means, he longed to return to New York and lay his heart and fortune at the feet of the girl he loved.

Mature reflection told him that she might refuse to see him when she learned that he had been an impostor, had gone under an assumed name, had pretended to be what he was not and had concealed from her and her father who he really was. She might not be able to understand the instinct that had moved him to adopt this course, to set out upon the adventure that had come near terminating disastrously.

If the pendant had not been found, he might have been accused of theft. Then he reminded himself how she had confessed to him her faith in him, and he yearned to go to her immediately.

But Henry Andrews' statement as to her reluctance to meet the nephew of Miss Jeanne DeLaine worried him intensely. If she wished to avoid him when he was living a conventional life in Baltimore, would she not shrink from him now?

Why had she been unwilling to meet the nephew of an old friend of her mother's?

He wished someone could explain this to him. If his aunt were here, she might enlighten him. Now that she was gone, who could?

All at once he remembered his aunt's intimate friend, Miss Bristol. He recalled his brief talk with her in October of last year, and his bustling efforts to escape her recognition that evening.

He was now in the smoking-room of his hotel. Seeking a telephone directory, he looked for the address of "Miss Myra Bristol."

In five minutes he had called her up and asked permission to pay his respects. Glad to see him, she said:

"Oh,—are you back from France?" the spinster exclaimed.

"I seem to be," he laughed. "And I am eagerly anticipating a call upon you."

"But," she insisted, "I have a better plan. Instead of coming this afternoon, arrange to dine with me this evening."

5,717 Troops Set Sail For Duty in Germany

New York, Oct. 18.—The transport President Grant sailed from pier at Hoboken to-day at 11 o'clock with 244 officers and 5,717 men of the United States Army for patrol and relief service in the areas occupied by United States troops in Germany, including Silesia.

The troops included the Fifth Infantry, Col. F. J. McCormick, commander; the Fifth Infantry, in charge of Col. E. A. Fry, who was also in command of the troops aboard the President Grant; Company D of the First Engineers, and a number of smaller auxiliary units.

The 5th and 50th Regiments are regulate a great many of whom wear one to three service chevrons and wound stripes. "They are men who are serving out their terms of enlistment and some who have re-enlisted."

Company D is the first unit to return to Europe. It participated with the First Division in all of its hard fighting and lost very heavily in killed and wounded.

Armistice Day Will Be Holiday in Maryland

Baltimore, Oct. 18.—November 11—Armistice Day—will be made a state holiday, Governor Harrington announces. He also declares himself in favor of a celebration in keeping with the importance of the occasion and said he would appoint a committee to make arrangements for its fitting observance.

No Cause For Coal Increase Now, Says Miners' Statement

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 18.—That there is no cause for a reported movement to increase the price of bituminous coal is the assertion made in a statement issued from the international headquarters of the United Mine Workers of America.

Local coal dealers declare that, since the strike opened, the price of coal has been increased at the mines from 25 to 50 cents a ton and say it is likely to go even higher. One local operator said the price now was no object, and that retail dealers and industrial concerns were offering higher prices in order to get coal.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

CANT HAVE FRIENDS AT HOME?

Kindly advise the most miserable girl in the world. I am twenty-three and fairly good looking, a stenographer in a downtown office, and do not enjoy my work, as I am tired of the same old grind. I live in a tenement house, and though my people can afford to have better entertainment, yet they do not see fit to do so. For this reason I have held myself aloof and have not cared to form any associations whatsoever, and now find my loneliness unbearable. I have spoken to my parents about this matter, but they say that everything is good enough for me. I wish you would advise me as to the best course to pursue to gain the friendship of young men and women.

I am not going to minimize the difficulty, and unhappiness of your position. It is only tragic, however, if you allow yourself to be utterly cast down by it. First join some good organization like the Y. W. C. A. There are innumerable clubs open to self-supporting girls in New York. Look these up, see what their aims are and decide with which you care to identify yourself.

As far as your home in the tenement house is concerned, a girl of your acquaintance, situated as you are, turned the kitchen into a mighty attractive place with blue and white oilcloth blue and white Japanese print which she bought at a few cents a yard. First she invited the girls when she was employed, then they brought their young men, and now winter that same tenement house kitchen was the scene of many good times.

HAS CUT OFF HER SISTER
 DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: My sister became acquainted with a fine young man who has been calling at our house ever since. About three months ago he stopped taking an interest in my sister, who is two years older than I, and began paying all the attention to me. Would you kindly advise me if it is proper for me to reject his attentions.

ANXIOUS
 If the young man was not engaged to your sister, and made her no binding promises, I do not see any way for her to receive his attentions. However, the fact that he dropped her for you might serve as a warning for you not to take him too seriously.

SHALL SHE FORGIVE HIM?

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Should I forgive my sweetheart when on Monday night he is cold and aloof. Wednesday he decides he needs a vacation and phones: "that he is going away for a week and will see me when he comes back," and then writes while he is away and asks me to forgive him for acting so funny? Please answer me, as I am very anxious.

UNHAPPY
 I think I should give this young man another chance, as perhaps he was tired and overworked, and really needed the vacation, which has apparently restored him to normality.

PARTY FOR COLLEGE BOYS
 DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: Do you think it proper for young girls between the ages of seventeen and nineteen to give a send-off party to some boy friends who are soon to leave for college? If so, please state how it should be arranged.

CONSTANT READING
 I think it would be a very nice and friendly thing to give the party mentioned to the young friends who are about to leave for college. It could be arranged exactly as any other party for young people, with dancing and refreshments, unless you care to make it an out-of-door affair and give the boys a picnic.
