WERY often when the material is richly colored and lovely in is itself, scarcely any trimming is needed to make a stunning garment. Such is the case with the striking evening gown attracting so much attention at the Cloos Company store. In itself a wonderful broche of vivid blue and gold charmens, it depends almost entirely on its own beauty and a few graceful side drapings for its effective ness. True, a mere touch of sliver lace peeps from beneath the nurrous skirt and the shoulder strap of net flaunts sparkling spangles, but, on the whole, its chief claim to fame lies in the appeal of the marvelous material alone.
