"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CCCCXIX
(Copyright, 1919, Star Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

My lunch with Daisy was a failure. I felt that the girl was at once bored and disgusted. She eyed me to her evident agony and to my real embarrassment, she insisted on reverting to the ring again with raw honesty.

"I'm in your power, Mrs. Harrison. You can do what you like with me, you know. My life is really in your hands. I'm a thief and you know it and I'm ready to pay off in any way you see fit."

From this attitude I couldn't move the girl, and as it was evidently no less than torture to her to be with me, I made up my mind this must be the last she'd ever see of me unless she chose to have it otherwise. This fitted in with what I had half promised Jim when agreeing that I'd rely on his judgment rather than on my own in future. I wouldn't be "Mrs. Fitt" any longer. Leaving Daisy to her own devices was a good way to prove the sincerity of my promise to Jim and myself.

As we finished our lunch I said with seeming lightness, which held a promise nevertheless:

"Daisy, I can see that you're busy—that your new work absorbs you. I don't want you to slip out of my life the way Kate did. But I can't force myself on you. Won't you—when you feel you really want to see me—let me hear from you? And make it soon."

"Why, of course! I'll call you up as soon as I have time," agreed Daisy in a tone of evident relief.

I almost felt that meant never and after some shopping I returned in great dejection of spirit to my empty apartment. Hardly had I arrived, however, when a caller was announced. It was Irma Warren, and I went out to greet her in my real delight.

She wore the simplest of navy-blue foulards dotted in white, and a neat little sailor of the round, flat style she seemed to adore. It topped it. She had the look of Doesn't hurt a bit and Freezone costs only a few cents.

With your fingers! You can lift off any hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the hard skin calluses from bottom of feet.

A tiny bottle of "Freezone" costs little at any drug store; apply a few drops upon the corn or callus. Instantly it stops hurting, then shortly you lift that bothersome corn or callus right off, root and all, without one bit of pain or soreness. Truly! No humbug!

radiant health and wholesome simplicity so rare in big cities.

"I'm so glad you're in," she said, unpretentiously. "I know very few girls, and—and I always did so want to know you. But you seemed so busy, and I felt sort of ashamed of being useless and old-fashioned," she added in a breathless rush, as if she were afraid she might get it said unless she got it out quickly.

"And I'm glad I'm in," I replied, "and gladder still I've joined the idle classes if it's to let me know you."

"Do you mean it really?" asked the niece of the great Mr. Haldane with the utmost simplicity. "I've wanted to come every day, but I wasn't sure I wouldn't be intruding. Then today I met your brother on the street, and he told me Mr. Harrison was away, and I thought you might be a little lonely, as I am sometimes."

"I'm very lonely," I confessed. "And nothing nicer than this visit could have come to break it."

"Would you come home to dinner with me?" Irma Warren eagerly asked. "This is uncle's night out. You see, Sunday is the chess game at our house, and then every Friday uncle goes over to the Chess Club."

"And what do you do?" I asked before I realized how rude, how personal it was.

"Oh, I read," replied Miss Warren, without embarrassment at having to confess that she hadn't any engagements, "and I embroider a bit and mend the linens. I never sew on colored things at night. Uncle thinks white is best so I won't injure my eyes."

"You haven't met many people in the city yet," I said half to myself, "but when you do they won't let you sit home sewing and reading."

"I do like to go to the theater, or to a good concert. And uncle is so kind. We go every Thursday and Monday in season," she replied.

"But I suppose you mean with young people. That would be nice. Do you suppose they'd like me?"

"I know it," I declared. "Now, I've a suggestion. This is a warm evening—one of the best, I suppose. Instead of going to your home for dinner, won't you be my guest at a roof garden?"

"I'd love it. Uncle has taken me once or twice, but the drafts are bad for his rheumatism. Can we go without an escort?"

There was a wistful note in that question. The cry of youth for youth, of Phyllis for Corydon, and I determined that my pretty Irma should have an escort and an attentive one. So, leaving her escorted in the livingroom with a good book, I went promptly to the telephone and called first Carl Booth, whose line didn't answer, and then Anthony Norreys, whose good Nora informed me that "Mr. Tony has left town for the weekend."

"Cravely disappointed that I couldn't make things gay and festive for the dear, simple girl waiting for me so trustingly, I started back and met Hedwig in the hall.

"Gentleman calling," she said. "Now isn't that nice of Dame Fate! She provides an escort." I reflected, giving a little skip as I hurried back to the livingroom.

Bending over the couch from which Irma Warren was just rising to greet him was a familiar bulky figure. I was just in time to see him grasp Irma's hand to his lips and to note the painful crimson which flooded her face. Then, as if sensing my presence, Tom Mason turned with a ready explanation: "I stopped in to see if I could motor you and Jimmie up the road for a bite, Donna Anna. And, behold, my kindly and watchful guardian angel sends Miss Warren to complete the party. You'll come, won't you, dear lady?"

"Why, we were going out to dinner," replied Irma Warren, guilelessly, "with evident pleasure."

"I thought probably Mr. Harrison had asked you and that you'd been right in the neighborhood to get here so promptly."

"Why, as Tom Mason ran his eyes over the girl's face with evident admiration, why did I suddenly see in her place Daisy Condon, with a dazle of bronze bright hair about her face?"

Woodchoppers Whet Axes For Y. M. C. A. Exercise

Woodchoppers of the city are getting their muscles in shape for the annual woodchopping bee which the Central "Y" is going to stage in Wildwood Park next Saturday afternoon. Last year the party chopped enough lumber to keep the home fires of the "Y" burning throughout the entire winter, and this year they expect to even break that record.

"Doc" Miller, who deserted the party last year, and ran away to see a football game, will be led in chains by Jack O'Neill, and it has been said that he will chop sixteen cords, performing between two and four on Saturday afternoon. Motor trucks will work far into the night carrying away the results of his labors.

The Kiwanis Club members are getting up early in the morning and running around the block in their nightgowns just to be in shape for the chopping, while the Rotary Club has organized itself into volleyball squads and is thus conditioning itself.

Everything has been arranged by Grant Forrester for the day, and it only remains for the chopping to be pleasant. Ell N. Hershey may grind the axes again, but no report has as yet been forthcoming.

Trees have an educational influence upon citizens, particularly children. You should plant one on Arbor Day.

OIL BURNER FOR FURNACE HEAT IS NEW INVENTION

Test of Scheme to Eliminate Coal Shovels Made at Penn-Harris

Just when the coal miners are threatening a nation-wide tieup with results filled with disaster to the nation's industries, Harrisburg is invited to become the home of a new heating device with which it is proposed to substitute cheap oil for coal, and do away with the coal shovel. The project centers around the inventions of William M. Hoffman, a mechanical and mining engineer, who has devised and patented a compact water and oil gas burner which is on demonstration in the engineering of the Penn-Harris hotel.

The burner is not much larger than a two-gallon oil can, being about 15 inches high, and eight inches in diameter. It is composed of four parts, which are ingeniously designed. At the bottom is the fuel pan, into which the oil flows with out forced feed. There, when it has seeped up through a mat of asbestos, the oil is ignited. With no other burner, this simple handling of this grade of oil possible. Other devices for burning fuel oil require forced feed, and mechanically-operated pressure tanks, nozzles, etc.

Automatic Controls

Above this fire pan is a mixer, into which the oil can be lifted by a jet of steam, this steam being provided by cleverly-placed water pockets in the burner's several parts, the water being under control from a tank. Rushing upward through the mixer this mass of blended steam and flame draws in the surrounding air, thus introducing the needed oxygen for the complete combustion utilizing the entire heat possibilities of the fuel. The flame then comes into contact with the generator, as the part of the burner next above, is named, and there the water, having been warmed in the mixer, turns rapidly into steam. Above the generator is the superheater, in which the steam having again been passed upward from the generator, is highly vaporized, and put into service most ingeniously. Most of it goes to intensifying chamber, thence flows to the fire pan, and upward, maintaining the wonderful flame; part of it is diverted to perfectly control the feed of water, and also to control the feed of oil, automatically. The oil will stop flowing altogether, should the water tank go dry.

The burner has not one mechanical operating part, and there are none about the operation except the automatic controls of the flow of water, steam and oil, which is simple enough for any inexperienced person to operate without trouble. Its controls are the most interesting features. One prevents excess flow of water, and gives regularity in water pressure; another prevents positively the flow of any water to the fuel pan; another enables the fire to be turned high or low according to the weather; while the most interesting and clever one of them all will shut off the oil completely, when it should not be allowed to continue to drip. With these devices practically all fire risk is done away with.

Observers of winter fires in dwellings know that most of them are caused by overheated furnaces. With the Three-Element Burner these will all be prevented.

The most unique thing about this burner is its simplicity, which is remarked by many who observed it. It is so simple, and can be produced so cheaply that its convenience can be enjoyed by the masses. Kerosene oil can be used as fuel whenever that is preferred.

The burner is adapted to either heating or power plants. Mr. Hoffman has one "harnessed" as he expressed it, to a specially-designed small steam boiler, which is only sixteen inches in diameter and six feet high, yet is guaranteed to furnish steam or hot water for any ordinary eight or ten-room house. He pointed out that with such a compact boiler, such perfect combustion conditions for economizing fuel, and such convenience of operation, due to the absence of dust and ashes, unparalleled advantages and economies in heating were at hand.

While there is a market in existing furnaces and boilers for thousands of the mere burners alone, there is a far greater field in the manufacture and sale of complete heating installations.

BIBLE CLASS PLANS FOR CHESTNUT HUNT

The men's Bible class of Derry Street United Brethren Church, will hold a chestnut hunt in Clags Valley on Thursday. There will be baseball, trap shooting and squirrel hunting, in addition. The men will leave Harrisburg on motor trucks at 7:30 in the morning. Yesterday subscriptions of $20 were made for each of the members who were in the United States service.

Harrisburg needs more trees. Plant them on Arbor Day.

MURDERER GETS DEATH SENTENCE

Alleged Accomplice Goes on Trial Next Month on Homicide Charge

Called before Judge C. V. Henry, in the Dauphin county court today, Lawrence, alias "Little" Brown, colored, convicted of the murder of S. Wolfe Jacob, a Steelton grocer, was sentenced to be electrocuted. Three minutes after Brown was brought into court he was on his way back to jail to await the official order fixing the week when he will die.

Brown, when asked by Judge Henry if he had anything to say, hesitated a second, then scarcely above a whisper replied, "No sir." Theodore Martin, charged also with murdering Jacob, was one of the principal witnesses against Brown. Martin will be placed on trial at the special session of criminal court during the week of November 10.

Three Got Ten Months

Charges of breaking into cars in the Rutherford yards of the Philadelphia and Reading railway, were sentenced to serve ten months in jail. They were John Jackson, Frank Baschler and Jack Taylor, alias Gaylord.

The men had stolen about $1,500 worth of shoes, underclothes and chocolate, most of which they declared in court today they disposed of to E. Alper, of this city, now on bail on a charge of receiving stolen goods.

Jackson and Baschler, two of the defendants, are married. Their wives were called to testify as to their previous conduct, and in sentencing them President Judge George Kunkel said: "We are taking into consideration the fact that you are married, giving your fam-

SYENKO ESCAPED WHEN CITY FELL

Chief Executioner For Reds Moved to Moscow Several Days Before

Seumy, Southern Russia, Oct. 20.—This important city, half-way between Kharkov and Tzernigov, has been captured by the Denikine's Volunteer Army, but the hope of the Cossacks that with it they would capture the notorious Syenko, called "The Gorilla of the Reds," was not realized. Three days before the city fell he had been ordered to Moscow by Trotsky.

To the American Red Cross men who are engaged in relief work in the rear of Denikine's advancing army, the story of Syenko was told on the first day of their arrival in Kharkov. Evidence of Syenko's madness met them on all sides.

Syenko was a carpenter of Kharkov, who was made chief torturer and executioner in that city of 800,000 people, for the six months of the Red administration. It is alleged that he organized a band of Chinese torturers and devised extreme cruelties.

At the fall of Kharkov he was sent to Soumy, where he continued his work of terrorism.

The fact that he was known to be in Soumy inspired the Cossacks with a special eagerness to capture the place, but on arrival here, they found that Syenko had been given

Academic Service Is Held in St. Paul's Church

The annual academic service for faculty and students at Harrisburg Academy, Technical High school and Central High school, was held yesterday in St. Paul's Episcopal Church. There were a number of choral selections and Herman Goldstein presented two violin selections. Dr. Floyd Appleton, rector, spoke on "The Relation of Learning to Happiness and Goodness."

LEAVES ON WALK TO PITTSBURGH

With the intention of completing his walk in four days, Sergeant Andrew J. Hill, of the local Army recruiting station, left here this morning at 7:30 o'clock bound for Pittsburgh. A motorcycle went along to carry his baggage. He planned to average 60 miles a day. Upon his arrival in Pittsburgh on Thursday, Sergeant Hill will go straight to the athletic field of the Westinghouse Company and compete with the Shultz brothers there in a one-mile walk. He will give his opponents a 25-yard handicap.
