prohibition amendment are as follows.

1. The words, "beer, wine or other intoxicating malt or vinous liquors," contained in the war emergency prohibition act are construed to mean all drinks containing more than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol. Sale of 2% per cent beer is, therefore, illegal.

2. Law does not apply to denatured alcohol, medicinal prescriptions in accordance with the United States pharmacopeia, patent medicines with the amount of alcohol printed on the package, flavoring extracts unfit for beverages, vinegar and preserved sweet cider. Manufacturers of such articles, however, must obtain permits.

3. Beer containing less than one-half of one per cent of alcohol not included in intoxicating liquor. 3. Beer containing less than one-half of one per cent of alcohol not included in intoxicating liquor, "but sale for beverage purposes under such name prohibited."

4. Stocks of prohibited beverages held for sale will be confiscated. Stills and other property used in the manufacture of same will be destroyed. No property rights exist in either case. Private homes will not be searched unless used for unlawful sale of liquor.

5. Enforcement of the act is placed in the hands of the commissioner of internal revenue and his assistants, who will act through the United States District Attorney.

through the United States

a bad effect upon shop girls stenographers and others who try to emilate wealthy vomen.

The discurs of followed a paper read by Mrs. George E. Snyder.

The solution to the high ever of itving problem she cited as "less oxiravagance and greater production all down the line." She told of rein or in the newspaper headines about strikes and threatened strikes and on another page read of a "special sale of ladies" suits beginning at $40 and up to $400." "Popular priced," she added. She declared that Government investigation is not the cure. She said: "It can avail nothing without the individual co-operation of the people."

Mrs. Philip Mitchell of the Hatboro 'Colory Club declared that recently her husband posted a notice that he would not continue any of his stenographers in his service who persisted in wearing thin and low necked waists. He set a date when the wearing of such waists was forbidden. "On that date," Mrs. Mitchell said, "the girls came into the office with high necked waists." She asserted her husband immediately raised the salaries of all the stenographers who wore high necked waists. The raise was $2 a week. "The payroll was increased materially," she said, and added, "but it was worth it."

Mrs. Mitchell said, "the girls came into the office with high necked waists. The raise was $2 a week. "The payroll was increased materially," she said, and added, "but it was worth it."

Mrs. Mitchell further told of a recent conversation of business men at a luncheon table, when these men agreed that they would engage no stenographer who wore peek-aboo waists and other open attree. Mrs. Mitchell said one of these men described his head stenographer sweet of the serious of transparent texture and wore straps on her underwear which she said "he described."

Thirty-Six of American Type Sent to South Prussia From France

Kharkov, South Prussia, Sept. 25. via Paris, Oct. 29.—Thirty-six Amer ican field kitchens, of the type used by the American Expeditionary ed to the army of General Kootepoff. They were brought here from France and presented to General Kootepoff by the American Red Cross as part of its welfare work among his troops.

The kitchens are of light construction and are easily transportable on the winter roads. Each kitchen has a capacity of 200 quarts of tea an hour, and 100 quarts of cabbage soup. As the Russian infantryman lives upon tea, bread and soup, they have been received with enthusiasm. They are the only portable kitchens in South Central Russia.
