Plenty of cider, apples, doughnuts, and candy will be on hand for these guests.

Visiting the Shops with Adele

Do you wear glasses? If you do, I'll venture to say you object most strenuously to having your photograph taken. Now, don't you? You argue, no doubt, that your eyes won't take well. You know from past experience that the lenses are apt to reflect light in such a manner as to make it almost impossible for you to procure a good portrait. And, indeed, it is a difficult matter. But Roshon, the Market street, photographer, has mastered the art of photography so completely that all difficulties are overcome and the mere wearing of spectacles makes no difference in the effectiveness of the photograph.

Prices Are Higher but My Mark-up is Lower

It seems to be pretty well recognized now that a dollar is worth but fifty cents. I hear all sorts of reasons given ranging from curtailed production during the war to overproduction of gold. I leave the true explanation to the experts. But I do know the facts about my own business. I know, for example, that last year I operated on a mark-up or percentage of profit which was so low that an accountant warned me that it approached the danger line. I know that it resulted in my doing a volume of business which surpassed my fondest expectations. I know that this year I have figured my profits still closer—so close in fact, that nothing but a tremendous volume of sales would enable me to show a net profit at the year's end. I do not claim that my prices are lower than last year's. But I do assert that my profit on each dollar of sales is less. Higher prices trace back to the maker and thence to the price of raw materials. On one point rest assured. I know that a lasting success can be gained through just one policy: a small mark-up on a large volume. And that is the policy to which I adhere.

A number of these resolutions, including possibly several relating to relations between the farmers and the American Federation of Labor, will come before the Congress to-morrow for action, to-day having been set aside for addresses to the Real Estate, Pennsylvania and state commissioners of agriculture.

SOMETIMES, in your dreams haven't you longed for a wonderful evening gown of turquoise blue? You know exactly how it should look, but, somehow, you couldn't find it in the shops. So your dream never materialized and you finally gave up the search. But, I found it yesterday in the Closs Company store. Of vivid turquoise blue, its marvelous chiffon velvet is partly covered in the skirt with long ropes of chenille-trimming. The waist is very simple—almost severe—depending upon a cloth of silver bodice and the beauty of the fabric for its charm.

HAVE you ever seen a quaint old Empire-Colonial sofa? Not more so, however, than the modern one made in that style, but with wider, more comfortable seat, now standing in the window of J. Forster Harris & Son, 221 North Second street. With little roll cushions fitting snugly in at each end and beautiful cover, it also boasts elaborately carved feet and arms of mahogany. I wish my description could do it justice. It can't! But it is possible for you to appreciate its beauty by visiting the shop.

I ALMOST wish I needed a bureau

Unfortunately, I don't! I like to have an excuse for purchasing an antique one from Mr. Saltzgriver at his Art and Antique Store, 223 North Second street. That may sound foolish, but, considering the attractiveness of those he has on hand, no one can blame me. The little brass handles and glass knobs alone make me feel like buying them all, while the beauty of the croch grain and solid mahogany of which they are made makes me envy their future owners. As it is, I console myself by daily admiring them at the shop.

I VE just been trying to count

the various uses to which a Majestic Electric Heater can be put. Without any trouble at all, I thought of twenty-five and, needless to say, there are many more. Have you ever seen one of these invaluable little heaters? About the size of the average electric fan and somewhat resembling it in appearance, they bring more comfort to the home than half a dozen other devices put together. Just consider how "comfy" it would be on a chilly morning to quickly warm your room by turning on a switch. Then, if additional heat is needed to enable you to enjoy your breakfast, think how convenient it would be to furnish it in the same easy way. It dries fine kid shoes, to say nothing of the laundry, and dispels the chill at any time. Incidentally, it is sold at the Dauphin Electrical Supplies Company, 434 Market street.
