"When a Girl Marries"

A New, Romantic Serial Leading With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CCCCXXXIX.

"Sherry's a wild 'un, and he's traveling all his well-known pails with Virginia," I repeated after Tom mechanically. "What do you mean?"

"I mean," said Tom gravely, "that Sheldon Blake is dangerous. I realize it's funny for me to take this tone. I know you have a few memories of me that make me look like a joke sitting here and hauling Sheldon up to the bar of justice. But it's because I'm so grateful to you for twisting my fool neck around so I could see how—how darn worth while decent things are. I'm not laughing at you. I'm terrified. I'm not laughing at all. I'm nearer tears. I judged you so harshly once that I almost missed this side of you."

"What made you hang on to your patience and give me another chance?"

"Jim," I replied simply, forced by Tom's deadly earnestness to give him the truth all unvarnished.

"That makes my debt double," said Tom quietly, not taking the least offense at the impersonal tone the man I had once considered him would surely have tried to change. "Can't you do anything with that proud reckless sister of Jim?"

"I don't know," I replied. But you make me feel that we must."

"You must indeed," murmured Tom earnestly. "I've no right to call Shelly a rotter. I think if he'd ever had a square deal from my cousin Evvy he'd have been different. But she's always played him off against the other man and then thrown him into the discard. He got tired of that no doubt, and it turned him bitter. Most likely it gave him a warped idea of women and sent him off to play the game as mercilessly as little Evvy's always played it with him."

"Yes," I said thoughtfully. "I can see that might be true."

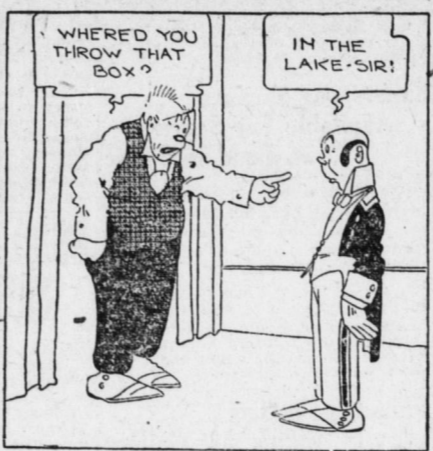

As a matter of fact there swept up from memory suddenly the whole panorama of the drive through the park Sheldon had given me back in the early days of my marriage. Evvy had stayed in our apartment and played checkers with Jim, whose ankle had gone back on him entirely. And Sheldon, driving me down a path of birch and pine, had whispered that I was a sweet little Lilac Lady, sweeter than he's ever guessed, and that he couldn't see how he'd missed me all these months. He

"What do you mean, Jim?" I asked. "You sound as if you meant something special."

"But all that, Jim would say was, 'wait and see.'"

CHANCE FOR SERVICE IN CHEMICAL WARFARE SERVICE

The recruiting officer at Harrisburg has received advices from the War Department that 1,000 recruits for the Chemical Warfare Service are to be obtained as soon as possible. It is desirable, though not essential, that the men enlisted for this service have chemical or engineering experience. The conditions authorizing the enlistment of these men follow:

1. Only white men will be enlisted.
2. Enlistments may be for a period of one or three years.
3. These men will be enlisted in the Infantry and assigned to the Chemical Warfare Service. While such men are to be enlisted in the Infantry branch of the service, it must be understood that they will never be required to serve in that branch against their will, but will be assigned at once to the Chemical Warfare Service in which branch they will remain until completion of their enlistment, unless the Chemical Warfare Service is discontinued sooner, in which case they will be given the option of transferring to some other branch or being discharged from the service. All men upon enlistment will be forwarded at once to report to the commanding officer, Lakehurst Proving Ground, Lakehurst, N. J.

As this calls for but 1,000 recruits from the entire country, Colonel Kemper, in charge of this recruiting district, advises the young men of this territory to take advantage of this opportunity at once.

POST TO MEET

New Cumberland, Pa., Oct. 31.—On Saturday evening B. F. Eisenberger Post, No. 462, Grand Army of the Republic, will hold its regular monthly meeting.

BY MRS. WILSON WOODROW

There are certain topics which are invariably discussed among groups of young people. This time-worn question is certain to come up. "Which would you rather be, an old man's darling or a young man's slave?" And since youth seeks youth, the answer is usually, "I would rather be a young man's darling."

However, I have had a letter from a girl whose preferences seem to run in the opposite direction.

"Dear Mrs. Woodrow," she writes, "for the past year a gentleman who is about twenty years my senior has been calling at my home as a friend of the family. He is a widower with four children, the oldest twelve and the youngest two. I love these children and I feel sure that my attachment to them is returned. The father has noticed my affection for them, and has taken a great interest in me.

"He has told me that he loves me, and that I alone can be a mother to the children and give them a good upbringing. I, in turn, think a great deal of this man. He is well-to-do, and can give me all my heart's desires. He has met many girls, but they seem to have no attraction for him. I am only making this sacrifice, if I can only make him happy.

"My mother does not object to my marriage to him, as she thinks he will make as good a husband as he has already proven himself a father.

"Do you think it would be right for me to marry this man who is so much older than myself? Any advice you may give me will be accepted with much gratitude."

"A TROUBLED GIRL."

If as she says, the question of age is the sole barrier, I do not think she has much to worry about. If the case were reversed, and he was twenty and she forty, she might well pause and give the matter a good many seconds, and even third thoughts. But what is a mere matter of twenty years on the right side between two people who have congenial tastes and care a great deal about each other? A man at forty is far from old, and some girls at twenty are more mature and settled than their

Brace Up! Don't Let Kidney Pains "Get" You

Is your life filled with the bleak winter of dull, drab, morose days—each one like the other before? No future happiness to dwell upon? No pleasant memories to cherish? Yet there is a perpetual spring-time to every man who is physically fit and who takes the proper care of his body.

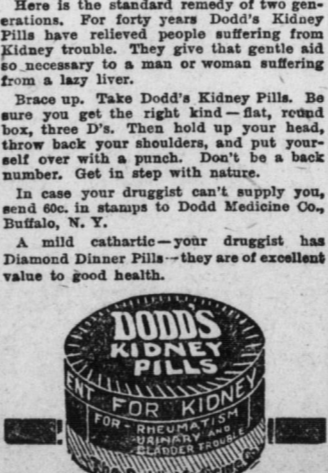

Be careful what remedies you try. A sick man is easily deceived. Every "cure" he sees kindles his hope. It is only natural that he will believe that which he wishes to believe.

Here is the standard remedy of two generations. For forty years Dodd's Kidney Pills have relieved people suffering from kidney trouble. They give that gentle aid so necessary to a man or woman suffering from a lazy liver.

Brace up. Take Dodd's Kidney Pills. Be sure you get the right kind—34, round box, three D's. Then hold up your head, throw back your shoulders, and put yourself over with a punch. Don't be a back number. Get in step with nature.

them; and these will be stern tests of her self-control.

It is also possible that she may have children of her own. In that case it may not always be easy to be equally kind and just to both sets. Only a very understanding and sympathetic person can successfully manage a group of children of differing temperaments and requirements.

The position of a stepmother is far from an enviable one. Every eye is wide open to see how she treats the children of a former marriage, and the relatives of the first wife are always ready to comment and criticize.

But in spite of the difficulties of the situation and the fact that stepmothers are often as black as they are painted, there are many stepmothers who have won and kept the love and loyalty of their adopted children, and give them better care and more attention than their own mothers probably would have bestowed upon them.

One of the most harmonious and happy families I ever saw consisted of "his children," "her children," and "their children." It sounds incredible, and I could hardly have brought myself to believe it if I did not know it to be true.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX
DON'T BE UNFAIR

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am twenty, am not good looking, but people seem to find me interesting. Six months ago I met a young man whom I learned to love dearly, but we had a quarrel and I haven't seen him since. Two months ago I met another man, and he proposed to me, but I didn't accept, as I don't love him, but if I discontinue his friendship I will feel very lonesome. Will you please advise me whether I should continue his friendship?

MARION.

Risk a little loneliness for the sake of playing fair with the man who cares for you, even though you don't love him. But, above all, don't be unfair to yourself as to trade your time and friendship for mere amusement. If you can be friends with the second man, after explaining the situation to him, that would be the ideal solution.

FAILS TO KEEP PROMISE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am so down-hearted and lonely that I just must write to you. I left the convent when I was fifteen and married a man twenty-nine. He never showed me any affection or consideration. Last year I met a student who was attending school here, and he told me he loved me. I left my home and went to work in his home town. He was twenty, and I am twenty-one. We were very happy, and he used to call every evening. I have now got my divorce and he refuses to see me any more because his friend said he should not marry me. Would it be proper for me to go to his home and demand an explanation?

B. V. T.

No young man gives up a girl he really cares about on the advice of a friend, and I think the young student is using that argument as an excuse for not making good his promise. Do not see that you have any hold over him without going to court, and it is doubtful if you would win the case. Don't you think it would be better to try in future to avoid these desperate love entanglements? You have been married and divorced and been badly treated by a young man whom you regarded as your fiancé, and you are only twenty-one. Why not try to depend a little more on yourself for happiness and contentment? Try to be less the victim of your emotions.

Over-Worked Men

The Strenuous Life We Are Living Uses Up Our Vital Forces Faster Than Nature Can Replace Them.

To overdo anything is harmful and a continuation of it will wear out the strongest man. Overwork, worry, brain-tire, high living, dissipation and other such habits waste away the most vital elements of the blood, brain and nerves—then disease sets in. At first there will be a general indisposition, poor appetite, indigestion, severe headache, wakefulness and weakness in the back, the temper irritable, the spirits depressed, the memory poor and the mind weakened, ending in premature decline. Dr. Chase's Blood and Nerve Tablets correct this condition by building up your blood and nerve forces. A trial will convince you.
