

1,000 GALLONS WHISKY SEIZED IN SINGLE RAID

Alleged Moonshine Still Is Searched by Federal Agents in N. Y.

New York, Oct. 31.—One thousand gallons of whisky were seized and two men arrested by police and internal revenue agents in a raid early to-day on an alleged moonshine still in the Bronx. Several shots were fired, but no one was injured.

The close of the first twenty-four hours of prohibition enforcement in New York found forty-seven persons arrested, 1,000 saloonkeepers in Brooklyn announcing the close of their places for to-day, and the opening guns fired in court battles to restrain law enforcers from enforcing the liquor dealers from selling.

Brewer Starts Suit
Jacob Ruppert, brewer, brought suit against Francis G. Caffey, United States District Attorney, and Richard McElligott, deputy collector of internal revenue, to restrain them from enforcing the wartime prohibition law. Meanwhile Earl B. Barnes, Assistant United States District Attorney, filed suits against five liquor dealers arrested yesterday for violation of the law, seeking to have them enjoined from continuing business. A decision in this suit favorable to the government would allow prohibition enforcers summarily to arrest liquor dealers as maintainers of "public nuisances."

Saloonkeepers Close
The 1,000 saloonkeepers in Brooklyn who voted to close their places at 1 o'clock this afternoon were members of the United Retailers' Association of Kings county. They unanimously decided to keep their establishments closed until "such time as the law allows us to sell something more than one-half of one per cent."

The revenue bureau's offices at the custom house is stocked high with bottles brought in by prohibition enforcement agents. Milk bottles, medicine bottles, flasks, preserved jam and virtually every known glass container were ranged in rows, filled with samples procured by the revenue men.

WOMEN WANT RIGHTS OF MEN AT LABOR TABLE

Report on Motion Expected Today at Their International Congress

Washington, Oct. 31.—A report on the motion that women be represented equally with men in all future international labor conferences called under the Treaty of Versailles, is expected to-day at the meeting of the International Congress of Working Women.

In the first formal motion to be presented to the congress, Mlle. Jeanne Bouvier, a French delegate and also a technical adviser to the present international labor conference, asked that in the next world labor meeting under the treaty six delegates be sent by each nation, two to represent employers, two to act for employees and two from the government, and that one of the two delegates in each group be a woman.

The executive of the congress meeting to act on Mlle. Bouvier's motion, referred it to a committee composed of Margaret Bondfield, England; Cabini Cassarelli, Italy; Victoire Cappe, Belgium; and Georgette Bollot, France.

Former Opera Star Is Now Inmate of Workhouse

One of the cheeriest residents in the Fulham road workhouse is a woman of seventy-three years who once delighted London on the operatic stage.

Under the name of "Lennox Grey" she played many leading parts at the West End theaters in the seventies; to-day her frail hands are still making music.

Almost any afternoon you may see a little crowd of eager listeners gathered round an untuned piano in the workhouse sitting room; "Lennox Grey" is playing old tunes beloved in her girlhood, and her thin, trembling voice, still strangely sweet, sometimes sings the old Victorian words.

"Lennox Grey" in private life is Mrs. Louisa Gibson.

She is deeply interested in the coming revival of the Gilbert-Sullivan operas, because she knew Sullivan long before he was knighted.

"He was a dear man," she said, and a light came into her eyes as her memory went back to the days of her brilliant triumphs.

"I was introduced to him at the theater; he told me he liked my speaking voice and that I ought to be able to sing. Ultimately he asked me to go to his home in Piccadilly, where he gave me several lessons.

"He was devoted to his mother; indeed I do not think I have ever met a man to whom his mother mattered so much. All that I learned of singing I owe to Arthur Sullivan.

"My mother was an actress," Mrs. Gibson continued, "and as a small child I played several parts, but I did not take up acting seriously until after my return from India in 1868. I appeared at the Princess, the Olympic and the Adelphi, all under the management of Clatterton and Webster.

"I played in Monte Cristo" and in many other dramas, until I went to the old Philharmonic. Then I went on tour, and afterward came to the Alhambra, where we did opera for four years. I played with Julia Marlowe and Harry Paulton, and then went to South Africa with a variety company.

"We were a very jolly crowd, and if I had not been unfortunate enough to get rheumatic fever I should have been happy enough. But the company went north and left me to fate, and I was five months in hospital.

"There were no pawnbrokers in Cape Town in those days, and all my effects were sold. But I got home by working my passage as a stewardess. There were only two women on board, so I had a very easy time.

"In my days a chorus girl was lucky to get $3 a week. She never got more than $6.25. The $52.50 a week which I got at the old Philharmonic was considered to be a star salary in those days—for such work an actress would not get less than $150 a week to-day."

Mrs. Gibson came to the Fulham road workhouse only a few days ago.

"I was for some time in an institution where I was not at all happy," she said. "So I ran away and came to the union, and everyone has been very kind to me here. If I could persuade the master to get the piano tuned that would be a great joy. I think I shall settle down very happily here."

There was a pause for a moment. Then Mrs. Gibson said:

"Of course, it is a little lonely. It would make me very happy to come across someone who knew me years ago and has not forgotten 'Lennox Grey.' I loved the life, and should like to have a visit from someone in the profession, for I cannot get about much now. But there, there! One must not expect too much."

"Underneath her skirts," "Lennox Grey" keeps a big black bag. It holds old photographs and letters and little souvenirs—all that remains to her of star.

Mrs. Jennings and Miss Ringland pointed out the immediate needs of public health nursing work, home nursing and hygiene classes, visiting nurses in every community and co-operation with State and Federal health authorities. She was high in her praise for the Harrisburg Chapter, which was one of the first to adopt and set in motion the peace-time program.
