NOW FOR WAIL FROM PITCHERS

Managers Plan to Keep Twirlers Away From Plate; One Plan

Chicago, Nov. 1.—Thorough arming of a radical suggestion is proposed during the winter meetings of the major leagues, and it has to do with minimizing the predominance of the pinch hitter in baseball box scores.

The idea is to eliminate the average pitcher from the offense by passing a rule permitting the manager of a team to choose in advance of a game whether or not the pitcher he selects shall bat for himself and, if not, allowing the choice of a bench warmer to hit for the slabman.

It is the manager's problem. Its purpose is to eliminate one of the manager's problems. When his team is behind in a game and his pitcher comes out with runners within scoring distance, the team's boss is confronted with the choice of letting the slabman, a weak batsman, stay in the game because he is the only one not scored on, or sending a pinch hitter to bat in his place and taking a chance with another pitcher who may or may not be on edge.

When a weak pitcher is assigned to pitch a game the manager would have the right to announce to the umpire that a substitute would do the batting for said pitcher.
