POULTRY AND SUPPLIES

WANTED—You to know that you can start your pullets and moulted hens to laying by feeding DR. HESS POULTRY PAN-A-CE-A. It contains tonics that promote a hen's digestion, tonics that tone up the dormant egg organs, so that the proper amount of food goes to egg production and not all to flesh and fat and laziness, when it's action and eggs you want. Here's a good suggestion: Provide your hens with a dust bath, to which add DR. HESS INSTANT LOUSE KILLER, say once a week. It keeps KILLER, say once a week. It keeps KILLER, say once a week. It keeps KILLERS ROUP REMEDY. All guaranteed. Sold by all dealers in poultry supplies.

Landscape Loses Charm in Long Aerial Trips [London Correspondence of the

Christian Science Monitorl
I have traveled by the new air service between London and Paris both ways, and the moment seems opportune for a frank discussion of the pleasures and miseries (for there are both) of air travel. I can claim to be a veteran, for I have been round and about in the air pretty constantly since the early part of 1907. For that very reason I (and others like me) may be apt to take too much for granted, and fail to understand the public, now fail to understand the public, now approaching practical flight for the first time.

Frankly, does flying hold out any pleasure for the average man and woman? Take, first of all, the scenery. It must be admitted that terrestrial scenery loses most of its charm seen from above. The beauties of English dales and old world villages are not visible; although for this there is some compensation in the easy evasion of the ugliness of London's suburbs and those vast stretches of regions that are neither stretches of regions that are neither town nor country.

Traveling by air one soon becomes weary of the slow-moving panorama of fields and woods. At panorama of fields and woods. At a height of a few thousand feet, even though the speed be 100 miles an hour the view. even though the speed be 100 miles an hour, the view passes so slowly that there is no real impression of speed, one of the consolations of railway and motor car travel. Of course, neither by train nor by car can the beauties of the country be properly enjoyed. You can rarely get a chauffeur who will consent to go slowly, no matter how lovely the countryside; and he chafes if he is told to stop for anything except meals.

Antelope Nearly Vanished
From American Fields

[Our Dumb Animals]
Next to the buffalo, the most numerous animal in the United States no more than fifty years ago, was the pronghorn antelope. About half the size of the deer, but a bit more compactly built, this dainty, fleet, little animal ranged the plains country, from the Missouri river westward almost, if not quite, to the Pacific ocean in places.

Along the north Pacific coast it was unknown among the forested mountains, but southward, along the animals, but southward, along the arid stretches of territory, it ranged clear to the sea. North and south it ranged from far northward in the Canadan country east of the Rockies (but not so far north to westward of these mountains) down clear across the United States and far southward into Mexico.

Antelope were "dry country" animals and were always found wherever sagebrush, bunch grass and the short, curly, buffalo grass existed. Outside of the arid regions the antelope range was more or less restricted, though they did range scattering that the lade states and the short, curly, buffalo grass existed. Outside of the arid regions the antelope range was more or less restricted, though they did range scattering that the lade states and the same and was murelered out some time ago. Howevit Weirich was announted by the fawns the mother would run with them to the nearest patch of prickly pear or cactus and stay there until the enearest patch of prickly pear or cactus and stay there until the enearest patch of prickly pear or cactus and stay there until the enearest patch of prickly pear or cactus and stay there until the enearest patch of prickly pear or cactus and stay there until the enemy left, which he was the enemy left, which he left in piles of dead and injured—in fact, this was common through your fact, this was common through Wyoming.

The pronghorn is still in existence on its old range here and there, but mostly only in small isolated areas where forest reserves or some other reservation or condition has given them a chance to survive. Over almost all of the thousands of square them a chance to survive. Over almost all of the thousands of square miles that used to be their home they have vanished and even their bones were picked up along with those of the buffalo and sent by trainloads to the fertilizer factories to be ground up and sent back to the land.

I knew the pronghorn intimately, for I ranged the sage plains with him for a number of years. I watched him live his daily life, occasionally shot a wolf and tried to get a fawn, and occasionally shot the antelope himself when short of the work of the antelope himself when short o well.

This very often led to its undoing, for all we had to do to get a shot was to crawl out into the sagebrush to a position within a quarter of a mile or less of a "bunch" of antelope, and then stick our hat or shirt or almost any object up on top of the gun barrel and wave it ahout, then drop it down, raise it, drop it, etc., until the antelope came within range, which he was certain to do because he could not understand this new moving object and could not resist coming up to investigate. We used to call this "flagging," and it was a common way of hunting a single head for meat.

Indians drove antelope herds into natural corrals or box canyons and killed them by hundreds sometimes for meat and skins. The buckskin made from antelope hide was white and soft, but not so strong as deer hide, being more porous, like sheepskin.

Paris, Nov. 7.—The Austrian delegation has handed to the Peace Conference the ratification document of the Treaty of St. Germain.

Eagles killed many of the fawns and they mixed killing many others because the mother would rear up and fight with her front feet, keeping the fawn under her and gradually working to some sagebrush or mas and were always found wherever ever sagebrush, bunch grass and the the short, curly, buffalo grass existed. Outside of the ard regions the ance telope range was more or less restricted, though they did range scatteringly into the black soil country of what is now the "corn belt" of eastern Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas and probably to some extent into Missourt, Iowa and Minnosta.

Their favorite range, however, was the plains country just east of the Rocky mountains, where they migrated with the seasons from Alberta to Mexico and between the Rocky and West coast ranges from Washington, southward to the guilf of southern California and the Mexican west coast.

These animals are the only true antelope found in either of the Americas, and are interesting from a good many standpoints. Fifty years ago they ranged the plains in thirtying in the dry sage plains where it would seem to the uninitiated that any animal must perish. For want of feed and water.

I have seen, on Laramie plains; in Wyoming, not later than thirty years ago, herds containing from 500 to 20,000 individuals, and this was about the typical distribution throughout the antelope range.

Trainmen of the Union Pacific Rallroad, who ran through the antelope country, know that their trains oftentimes plowed through big herds of antelope, killing many of them, and tossing them right and left in plies of dead and injured—in plies of dead and injured—in green of the southern control of the country of them, and tossing them right and left in plies of dead and injured—in the plains in ple of the dead and injured—in the plains in the proposition of the many of them, and tossing them right and the plains in the proposition of the more of the president.

TEUTONS PLOT FOR REVOLUTION

Radicals Would Turn Over Berlin Leadership to the Russians

> Essen, Germany, Nov. 7. - Inrestigators for the Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung of Berlin claim to have discovered plans for a communist uprising to depose the present German government and to es-tablish a new one modeled on the Russian plan which would be asso-ciated with the present Russian So> clated with the present Russian Soviet system.

> The investigators assert that the proposed revolution is to be assisted and officered by Russian Bolshevists and that the outbreak is to have its beginning in the Ruhr coal district.

Headquarters at Brunswick
Munich, Brunswick and other cities are claimed to be subcenters for the movement. According to the paper, Spartacists and Communists will be armed throughout Germany. The Communists are said to count on desertion by whole groups of the national defense army and on taking them into their "red army," General fighting headquarters, it is asserted, will be established in Brunswick, already a Spartacist and Communist center, and a council government is to be proclaimed.

"The meeting worked out details for the rising," the Allgemeine Zeitung declares. "Among them were:

"Disarmament of defense troops; establishment of a central office in Leipzig and a general strike in all industrial centers of the country.

"After the industries had been shut down and troops are concentrated at certain industrial points," the newspaper adds, "a general night attack is to be made on the government troops in the cities. German and Russian Communists leaders will be on hand to lead the attack. If
