When Feast Days Impend

However elaborate its feast-day array, no well-bred diningtable groans nowadays for the new styles are built to endure faithfully through the festivals of generations yet to come!

If you still admit a weakness for the conventional china closet, you fancy need not be denied. In many of the newest diningroom suites, however, the china closet has been superseded by the silver cabinet, with finely grained mahogany doors where glass once was framed.

Did you know that hostess as well as host may legitimately lay claim to the arm chair, with its air of genial formality? In England, where the custom originated, two arm chairs were always used.

If Great Grandmother neglected to bequeath you one of her charming old-homedstead lowboys, you'll want one to replace the prosaic serving table, of course—a dainty thing with cabriole legs and the classic claw-and-ball foot of Queen Anne, by way of suggestion.

"Place me," pleads the dainty mahogany mifflin stand, "at the right hand of the hospitable hostess, when Thanksgiving's merrie company throngs the family board!"

Two may give thanks quite as joyfully as ten—given a quaint gatelegged table, now made in extension styles, with Windsor chairs to gather roundabout! The Windsor and the gateleg, as you may have discovered, form a delightful combination.
