Prisoners Are Human

"If I treat the prisoner as a human being, sit down and talk over his problems with him, he appreciates it. Too much attention has been paid to punishing the prisoners and not enough to giving him a chance to make something out of himself. If the people would only realize that the less care and attention they give to their State prison, the worse it is going to be for them, it would be a great deal better. Every prisoners who is given nothing but ill treatment while he is serving his sentence comes out a potential evildoer, and enemy of society; not an enemy of society generally, but of you, yourself, and you ought to realize that. she seemed weary of the rather monosonous proceeding of selecting jurors. As each one was called she was required to stand and face the jurors. The questions asked the jurors seldom varied. They were first asked their residence, their occupation, sometimes were queried about their age, their health and their hearing. Each one was asked whether he had formed or expressed an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the girl, whether they were conscientiously opposed to capital punishment, whether they were married and if married, whether they had any children. One juror said he had known the defendant since she was a little girl, and did have an opinion about her guilt or innocence which would likely influence him in giving a verdict if he were accepted as a juror. He was challenged for cause and excused.

The subject was not an-nounced. The subject was not an-

the meeting, but the miners position on this subject was not announced.

Many Will Obey

The question of just how many of the coal diggers would obey the order rescinding the strike was problematical early to-day. In some districts it was considered that the resumption of work would be general while in others it would be only partial and in some, it was said, the return would be very slow.

Most Momentous

The meeting was probably the most momentous ever held by the miners' organization, if not the most weighty ever conducted by a labor organization in this country, for, in view of labor leaders, it was to determine whether an organization would be forced by governmental pressure through the courts to discontinue a strike, when apparently all the members of the union were behind the walkout, which was being conducted without any form of violence or damage to property.

Backed by A. F. of L.

Labor in general, as represented by the executive committee of the American Federation of Labor, had offered its unqualified support to the miners in their strike, while obedience or disobedience of a Federal court order hung in the balance, and this fact gave miners representatives who favored holding out an argument which weighed heavily with some of their colleagues.

No Limit on Debate

No Limit on Debate

On the other hand, the President's designation of the strike as unlawful, placed the coal workers in the position of defying the government of the United States, if they refused to call off the strike, and, aside from the consequences attaching, to disobedience of the Federal court order, many were adverse to considering anything which could be construed as lack of Americanism.

There was no limit on the debate in the conference and many of the delegates spoke at length and some more than once on various subjects.

Demands of Miners No Limit on Debate

Demands of Miners

Demands of Miners

The original demands of the United Mine Workers, which brought about the strike of approximately 425,000 bituminous coal miners of the United States were drafted by the scale committee of the Cleveland convention of the organization, held last September, which also adopted the following resolution:
"We recommend that in event a satisfactory wage agreement is not secured for the central competitive field, (Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and Western Pennsylvania), before November 1, 1919, to replace the one now in effect, the international officials be authorized and are hereby instructed to call a general strike of all bituminous miners and mine workers throughout the United States, the same to become effective November 1, 1919."
