Smith followed the admirable paper with remarks on the general subject and a brief outline of Margaret Cameron's "Seven Planes," by Albert Watson, president of the Canadian Society for Psychical Research. What Do Glasses Mean to You?
Perfectly fitted glasses are constantly performing a marvelous work in the relief of eye-strain and defective vision.
They represent a great deal more than mere merchandise—they represent a high degree of professional skill in their prescribing, and almost as much mechanical skill in their making.
Beware of "bargain counter" glasses—don't take any such risks with your eyes. Call and let us fit them accurately, scientifically.

The Modern Note
Twenty years ago Frederick Taylor, the founder of scientific management, was attempting to get a hearing for his theories and in most cases was laughed at for his pains. To-day American efficiency experts are in demand all over the globe.
Ten years ago psychologists who claimed that by a series of simple problems they could test the speed and accuracy of a man's mental reactions and assign him a rating as to his mental equipment were objects of derision. Two years ago the United States Government called these same men into consultation: applied their methods to the Army recruits and as a result was able to assign round men to round holes and square men to square ones. There was almost perfect correlation between the findings in the theoretic tests and the results in the field of practical effort.
These are but two instances of hundreds which could be cited showing how science is superseding guess-work: how careful research is replacing rule of thumb methods. And in every case the innovator has first been derided, later to be decorated.
Now comes the modern note in retail selling—the enlisting of science and the methods of the psychologist in the cause of better service for the customer in apparel stores. My staff has been carefully trained in accordance with the most recent findings of science. When you deal here you receive service—plus.
