Loughlin, Losing Fighter, Gets Two Hard Wallops

Willie Loughlin, who disappointed a big crowd at a Motiva Power show recently, is losing ground as an attraction. The Scranton Republic says:

"It begins to look as though Willie Loughlin, of Bethlehem, is surely on the downward grade as a fighter. Within the past few months Loughlin has suffered several defeats, including a kayo at the hands of Eugene Broseau, of Canada, but the worst blow of all came on Tuesday night, when he was stopped in two rounds by Frank Carbone, of New York. Carbone is the fourth-rate who appeared here in an alleged fight with Jeff Smith last week. The two men fought at Allentown."

"That Loughlin's jaw is the most vulnerable spot in his physical make-up and is greatly hampering his ring career is firmly established in the minds of local fight followers. Mike O'Dowd and Ted Kid Lewis discovered this fact and the local boys were for a big house at the Sportman's Club, in Allentown, Frank Carbone, the Brooklyn veteran, was wise to chin coming to get a decision. The second round brought a decisive victory for the Brooklyn brawler. The sudden ending was probably one of the biggest surprises ever handed the Loughlin followers, who were just beginning to settle in their seats in hopes of witnessing a slam-bang battle, sure to go the entire route and that all persons would be on the long end at the finish. And they had reasons to expect just such a battle, for in previous encounters Willie always held Carbone at bay in addition to administering wholesome punishment."
