STUDY CHILDREN AND COMMUNITY

Keynotes of the Discussions of the Educational Congress During the Week

Study of the pupil and of the needs of the community and thoughtful effort to implant principles of Americanism and correct speaking, were the keynote throughout the sessions of the first Pennsylvania Educational Congress which closed its various sectional meetings at the Capitol last night.

Over 1,000 educators from all parts of the State gathered here to hear addresses on specialized subjects by men and women of authoritative knowledge of the lines in this State, the National, Capital and sister commonwealth, while the discussions were unstrained. Conclusions of each of the score or more of topical conferences are being put into written form for perusal by the State educational authorities in their great work of mapping up a new educational policy for the State.

Dr. W. D. Lewis, deputy Superintendent of Public Instruction, who directed the successful conference during the week in the absence of Dr. Thomas Finegan, who was taken ill a week ago and is in a serious condition, said again that he had been impressed by the earnestness with which the subjects had been discussed and that valuable material had been obtained. The conclusions will be digested and when plans are made they will be submitted to Governor William C. Sprout upon his return from Virginia.

The final day's discussions took a wide range. Important among the discussions were those pertaining to financial support of districts which brought to the attention of heads of schools in rural counties that it will be essential to increase the allowance for country teachers to hold them, as the situation has become acute and new faces appear in rooms every year and on continuation school. Bruce Watson, of Philadelphia, said that as a result of a survey he had accepted that many employers prefer raising of the minimum age limit for juvenile workers rather than conduct the continuing school. Other speakers spoke of the feelings of children toward these special schools.

The Harrisburg Public Library's system of conducting school libraries in this city came in for generous praise at the hands of instructors who have been considering the library feature of school work and further inquiries as to the way it operates will be made.

Resolutions of sympathy for Dr. Finegan's illness were adopted by various conferences.
