"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LITTLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CCLXIV.
(Copyright, 1919, King Feature Syndicate, Inc.)
"This isn't a little worry, Jim. It is a cruel tragedy—and it's mine and yet not mine." I said in response to Jim's invitation that I confide in him after Father Andrew had started on his fateful journey to the Canadian Northwest.

"Go ahead, then — for mercy's sake, tell me what you have on your mind," said Jim irritably. "I suppose it's some bunk about Val and Lane or something like that again. Well, get it off your chest."

The change from tenderness to irritation puzzled me. "I said, as much as I love you, I don't want to tell you that I could excuse his moodiness. That's why you're so jumpy—my husband, his husband— one minute with a strong shoulder all ready for his tired Lilac Lady to lean on, and a moody, small boy the next."

"Cut out the rhetoric and speak your spiel," demanded Jim. His impatience forced me to quick, terse speech and so I blurted things out crudely.

"Jim, Father Andrew had a telegram from a man claiming to be my father, Lucky Lee."

"Thought he was killed in a railroad accident," replied Jim indifferently.

"He says that was someone else. And we couldn't identify the body properly. It was so—married. And now this man may turn out to be my own father. Father Andrew's gone to Canada to see."

"Hope he won't be a disreputable old cuss," said Jim idly.

"Then I burst out with what he was evidently failing to understand. "But, Jim, if this man is my father don't you see what it does to Neal—and Phoebe?"

"To Neal and Phoebe?" What's it to them? Why under the sun do you want to ring them in on your funeral?"

"Jim, don't you see?" I cried. "If this is my father, then mother never had a right to marry Father Andrew—never was married to him in the sight of the law. And Neal—Neal hasn't a right to his name. Oh, my poor darling Neal. Think, think what this means to him!"

"It's deuced uncomfortable the way you put it, Anne. But I'll bet that any court of law will say he's legally Andrew's son. After all, your mother buried a body she believed was her husband. She considered herself a widow, and, by heck, she was a widow as far as she ever knew." Young Neal's all safe. We'll fix it up with this father of yours to hold his tongue. So that's all right."

"But it isn't, Jim!" I cried. "Phoebe has a right to know. She must decide whether or not she's willing to share what's hanging over Neal's head."

"Oh, bunk! You talk as if we were living in the Middle Ages," retorted Jim, with a callousness I hadn't heard in his voice for months. "It doesn't make a damn bit of difference with the kids. People of to-day are broad-minded and square. The only ones it does affect are yours truly and wife. We may have an old scam on our hands—beggings your pardon for calling your father that."

"I'm afraid that's true enough," I replied wearily. "And this menace to Neal's name and position worried him terribly, so that's why it has gotten on my nerves."

"Does he take it seriously?" asked Jim with a queer wobbles in contrast to his cocksureness of a moment before.

"I wonder. Say, an' how'd it be to get the kids safely married before we actually know there's a barrier?"

"Jim, how can you? Didn't they promise Father Andrew to wait till he got back? And, anyway, you surely wouldn't let your little sister in to share a disgrace she may want to avoid."

"Jim looked at me strangely. "The Harrison pride—that's what you're thinking of," he said, with a jerky laugh. "But I was thinking it might be better off safely married. It might frighten her, but—other things. Come on, Anne, let's see this through to a finish. They are mad about each other. They only want half an excuse to send out the wedding invitations. A bang-up affair out at Jeanie's. Come

Bringing Up Father

Let's see this one thing through before—before—before—
"Before Father Andrew returns?" he can't, Jim, they wouldn't. They promised him. Neal doesn't know what may be coming to him."
"Who does?"
"Jim almost snarled that, then he laughed again and subsided with a lack of faith in his own judgment which was hardly more salutary than his old habit of laying down the law."
"All right, have it your own way. I just thought I'd like to see this through and have them happy before fate had a chance to step in."
"You keep saying you want to see this through. But it isn't up to us. It's their affair, and they don't need us to work it out for them."
"Perhaps you're right. Anyway, Jeanie is Phoebe's guardian. The wise old governor saw to that. I'm glad now. She'll look out for the kid. But I don't want you worrying, Lilac Lady. I'd spare you all worry if I could. If only I could—"

As Jim ended he drew me into his arms and close to his heart. I felt him tremble as he laid his lips against my hair.
"I'd give you the stars and the moon if I could," he whispered. "I'd give you the world, dear. Remember that. Always remember that."
"Keep telling me, dear," I answered, thrilling, as I always do in response to Jim's tenderness. "I'd rather you tell me than just leave me to remember."
For answer Jim only drew me closer and held me against his heart.

CREWS LEARN MECHANICAL DETAILS OF TROLLEY CARS IN PRACTICAL SCHOOL

Employees of the Harrisburg Railways Company, including the conductors and motormen both new and old, are now attending a school of instruction so that they may become familiar with the working parts of the cars which they operate. The school was opened yesterday and the picture above shows the "class room," a car which has been rigged up for the purpose. Practically all of the working apparatus in the car is exposed to view and the action that takes place when certain levers which car operators handle is shown.

The officials of the company believe that in the past there have been delays in service due to minor breakdowns which could have been repaired in a very few minutes by the crews themselves had they been familiar with the working parts of the cars and it is with the idea of preventing such delays that the scheme of conducting a school for the men was worked out.

The purpose of the company, in which Theodore, Archibald and Kermit Roosevelt, Jr., Richard Derby and Philip J. Roosevelt are directors and which has articles of incorporation were filed at Albany yesterday, is to take over and manage an existing coffee house on the edge of the White Light district.

"We saw a chance to make some money," said one of the directors.

Beauty Answers

By MADAME MARCEE
MINNIE—The great secret of making hair grow is in the development of the vigor of hair roots. Mere stimulation of the hair follicles is not enough. It is the lack of realization of this fact which is the cause of so much failure in the treatment of the hair. The hair roots may be developed to a very remarkable degree by using the proper methods. As a root-developer nothing can equal the use of benzoin quinine. This can be secured at any drug store for 50 cents, in one-ounce packages. When mixed with a half pint of bay rum and a half pint of water the developer is ready to use. It is not only safe when used liberally, but gives all the results which anyone could wish. By developing the roots, the hair grows thicker, becomes thick, vigorous and silky, and spots fall out, and instead of shrunken, sick hairs which fall out readily on combing we have strong hair held firmly in the scalp, thus putting an end to hair falling.

MRS. A. T. F.—The skin can be brought back to its original plumpness and vigor by the following formula. An astonishing result is the quick disappearance of wrinkles, little and big, crows' feet, and spots of age. It is simple and can be prepared in a few moments by adding to half a pint of water one tablespoonful of glycerine and two ounces of opol, obtained from your druggist for 50 cents. This makes a cream for your face, neck, and is always sure and positive in its work if you will apply it liberally, every day.

MAY B. T.—As to head-wash, I advise against using soap of the many shampoos sold, because of the alkali they contain. This dries up hair secretions and gets at the root store and dissolves a teaspoonful of it in half a cup of water. You can get enough egg-yolk for twenty-five cents for a dozen or more head-washes. It is magic in cleansing hair and scalp, and aids wonderfully in making hair grow.
