"When a Girl Marries"

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CXXXI
(Copyright, 1919, King Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

Lane Cosby started for the Northwest two days after Father Andrew and Uncle Ned began their trip. By that time Val was up and about and her hands needed only light bandages at night. Poor little Lacy Willoughby, however, didn't fare so well. The shock and terror of the accident had unnerved her, and the burn that ran across her left temple and cheek weakened her with pain. The seared flesh hurt and the lash of terror lest she be disfigured for life made the agony twofold.

So Aunt Mollie took matters into her own hands, rented a cottage in the clean pine woods for a month and transplanted the twins in a jiffy. On the very day that Aunt Mollie staged her exodus, Phoebe came bounding home with a plan that set her delicious with joy. Carlotta was going off to an old bungalow belonging to the Sturges family and she had invited Phoebe to come along and share her fortnight's vacation.

"What makes it perfect," announced Phoebe, "is that Neal's to come down and stay with some nice farm-people Carlotta's known ever since she was a youngster. Now, don't say I mustn't, Anne."

"I say you must!" I laughed. "It's just the thing for all of you. I never knew a friendship of which I more thoroughly approved than yours and Carlotta's. Her courage and strength are wonderful for you, and your sweetness and gentleness are just as good for her."

"I suppose so," replied Phoebe absent-mindedly. "Now may I go, phone Neal it's all right and then start packing?"

"Run along, baby," I said, rejoicing to have her little moments of happiness no matter what pain the future held.

"Then the phone rang, and when I answered, Virginia's voice came over it filled with the good-will toward life she seems always to express nowadays.

"Anne, dear," she said, "that thoughtful young brother of yours just telephoned for my sanction to his visiting a farmhouse in the neighborhood while Phoebe spends the next fortnight with Carlotta Sturges. Of course the old dragon guardian had no reason for refusing, but it delighted her that the nice boy paid her the compliment of consulting her."

"Neal is a dear, isn't he?" I asked, Virginia's satisfaction commingling itself to me.

"He is, and a member of a delightful family!" laughed Jeanie. "But, Anne, I didn't telephone to rave over the Lees and the Hylands, but to ask Anne of the tribe of Lee to pack up herself and my brother and spend the next fortnight out here at Dreamwood. How about it?"

"Oh, Jeanie!" I cried in delight. "I'd love it! Are you sure you want us—that we won't be interrupting the honeymoon?"

"You'll be adding spice to the love-feast," replied Jeanie with a reassuring touch of her old malice. "Don't consult Jim. Just pack him up and put him in the car and let Lyons do the rest. I'll count on you for dinner to-morrow night."

"Count away," I said. "We'll be there to make your 'two plus two equals four' come true. Good-by, dear, and watch me hug you when

Bringing Up Father

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN— YOU SEE ZE GENTLEMAN IN ZE CABINET— NOW WATCH ME VERY CLOSELY.

I set where I can say a good old-fashioned thank you.

Then I hung up the receiver and ran in to tell Phoebe that she wasn't the only member of the family to go a-holidaying. But in the midst of my very first goat, I thought of Val.

I couldn't go off like this and leave her alone with everyone near and dear to her out of town. So I went to the cabinet and explained to her, Virginia amiably and lazily told me to include Val—to include the whole town if I had to—but to arrive in time for seven o'clock dinner to-morrow night.

With a mixture of triumph and regret I hurried to Val's apartment to offer the invitation that made our own holiday decently possible.

Val looked at me steadily for a moment, her long eyes seeming to weigh and consider.

"Why are you suddenly so considerate of me?" she asked in her creamy voice. "You don't actually like me nor approve of me, Anne. Do you force yourself to be so decent to me because it's your pose to befriend—the people—or are you simply good of lane?"

"Val," I cried, "why do you fling a bit of neighborly kindness in my face with a barb or an attack? We're neighbors. Our husbands and families are friends. And aren't we pretty good pals—even if we haven't precisely the same outlook on life?"

"The same outlook on life!" Val flung the words at me with a chuckle to spite them. "You're a Puritan, Anne. You like to look at life under a microscope, but you've no desire to live it. Heigho! Keep your microscope, old dear. It would bore me. Or disappoint me. Everything does—and so does everybody, including your righteous self and my—most unrighteous one."

"Good stuff!" I ventured. "And now that the first page of your epigrammatic play is spread before my eyes—how about Virginia's invitation?"

"Oh, yes—Virginia's invitation?" Val appeared to be weighing it for a minute or two. She closed her eyes wearily, leaned back among the cushions of her couch and swung her slipper from the toe of a cobwebby stocking.

"Now—on the whole I won't come," she replied at last, opening her eyes to fix them on me with bright malice. "Aunt Mollie has asked me to visit her and the Willoughby twins at their cottage in the pines. I won't be alone. So if that's what worried you, you can just go off and forget me."

"Val, come with us," I found myself crying with unexpected fervor. "I'd like to know the real you—the you who saved Lacy Willoughby, the quick-acting, straight-thinking, brave you who bathed her hands in fire to save that little—sparrow."

Val laughed, but her eyes were misty for a second, not hard and Oriental. Crimson stained the cream of her cheeks, and she held her hand out to me with an impulsive gesture.

"I'll go," she said, "I'll go. You make me think perhaps I am brave—and steady."

C. A. O. CLUB DANCE TOMORROW NIGHT

Attractive Event to Be Held at Civic Club House by 1919 Members

I CLOSE ZE CABINET DOOR AND COUNT FIVE—

One of the most interesting social events of the Thanksgiving season will be the C. A. O. Dance to be held to-morrow evening, at 8.45 o'clock, at the Civic Club House. This dance, to be given by the members of the class of 1919, will be strictly formal. The hall will be attractively decorated in keeping with the season, an effective color scheme of yellow and white, the club colors, being carried out. Tall vases of yellow chrysanthemums will be placed throughout the room festooned with yellow and white crepe paper.

According to the custom of the C. A. O., only a limited number of invitations were issued. The dances given by this club are noted for their attractiveness and this Thanksgiving event bids fair to outdo all others previously held.

The committee in charge comprises: Miss Helen Kochenderfer, Miss Helen Crabbe, Miss Dorothy DeVout, Miss Virginia Porter, Miss Gertrude McDevitt, Miss Eleanor Eby, Miss Hazel Collier, Miss Charlotte Ferguson, Miss Grace Poake, Miss Elizabeth Lloyd, Miss Elizabeth Howard, Miss Margaret Good, Miss Charlotte Grove, Miss Mildred DeShong and Miss Lois Coons.

The Sphinx Club held a dance last evening at the Harrisburg Academy in an elaborately decorated hall. Cornstalks and streamers of blue and gold, the Academy colors, added a pretty touch to the scene. The patrons were Dr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Brown, Dr. and Mrs. Edward M. Green, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Omwake, Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Tukey, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dahl, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kunkle, Mrs. William Jackson, Mrs. S. Reuel Sides, promises to be a most brilliant affair. The Sourbeer-Meyers orchestra will play for the dancing beginning at 8.30 o'clock.

DANCE AT PENN-HARRIS
The Thanksgiving dance to be given this evening at the Penn-Harris by a committee comprising Mrs. Claire L. Miller, Mrs. G. Porter Harris and Mrs. S. Reuel Sides, promises to be a most brilliant affair. The Sourbeer-Meyers orchestra will play for the dancing beginning at 8.30 o'clock.

BEAUTIFUL TALES OF HAWTHORNE

Story Tellers League Hears of Wonderful Sculptural Work in Literature

OPEN ZE DOOR AND ZE GENTLEMAN HAS DISAPPEARED—

Members of the Story Tellers League, in session last evening in the directors' room of the Public Library, had the pleasure of hearing a well-written paper on Nathaniel Hawthorne, with several of his stories told.

Miss Rhedna Mayer, second vice-president, was in the chair, and read an appreciation of Hawthorne, written by Miss Lois K. Booker. Miss Booker cited Hawthorne's cleverness in presenting light and shadow in direct quotation. "Though his messages were often abstract, the impressions are constantly lasting and hallucinatory. In his thought association he was sculptural and unconsciously carved many noble forms as he wrought in literature. Hawthorne was also tangible, constantly artistic and aesthetic, but too modest to admit an hour of inspiration did come to him. He develops the character, giving his ideals and his most proudly recognized as an artist story writer."

The Hawthorne stories told were "The Pomegranate Seed," "Lockwood," "Mazie Pitecher," "Miss Geste Landis," "Paradise Child," Miss Alice Cusack.

BENEFIT DANCE TOMORROW
One of the Thanksgiving dances of interest will be the benefit dance to be given to-morrow evening in the ballroom of the Penn-Harris by members of the Jewish younger set. The proceeds will be divided among various local charitable institutions and public organizations.

GUESTS IN LANCASTER
Miss Helen Arch, accompanied by Mrs. Arch, Kunkel and Cowden streets, and Miss Bessie Levin, 1107 Montgomery street, will spend Thanksgiving Day in Lancaster. Miss Helen Arch will remain for a visit with Mrs. Louis Forman.
