LOCUST ST. AT SECOND

Visiting the Shops with Adele

EVERYBODY goes to teas—they're so delightful. In England, for instance, no matter what else one does not do, one always takes one's tea at four o'clock. And that most gracious, pleasing custom has slowly swept our land until now, when day draws near its close, beyond all else, stands Tea. And oh, how charming is that most elusive atmosphere which hovers round the teacups! What friends talk, portend the delectable indeed, the atmosphere, rather than the beverage itself, lures many to the spot where the music of the tinkling cups mingles with the laughter of sweet feminine voices. Just such an air of pleasure and of joy pervades the Lorraine Tea Room, in Walnut street, the ideal place in which to stop for a merry, informal chat after the matinee. Fragrant, delicious, homemade cakes endear it to the hearts of all hostesses. Tables can be reserved.

IT was, indeed, a happy thought that first inspired silk underwear. And for sheer daintiness its charm was never better exemplified than in the exquisite glove silk dress shown at the French Shop. Whether they be plain, hemstitched or pastel embroidered ones you may desire, don't fail to inspect Miss Swopes's assortment before making any final selection. The same thing applies to the lovely and dainty and appealing Filipino combinations and night dresses. More practical for constant use, but equally as lovely, they make you a willing victim to their charms. In connection with them, may I mention the attractive French Shop's boudoir slippers, lace caps, ranging in price from $1.00 to $3.00?

FASHIONABLE models, excellent tailoring, distinctive lines and choice fabrics identify the McFall's suits. In fact, there is a decided suggestion of individuality in every article sold at the McFall store, no matter what it may be. That is because they handle a superior grade of goods only obtainable at the smaller, more exclusive shops. Remember this when the all-important hour for selecting his Christmas gift arrives. Every article sold is irreproachable in style and service. Even the bathrobes, those ever acceptable gifts, are far superior to the ordinary variety in both design and quality. Then, there are the gloves—how He would appreciate a pair of warm, fur-lined ones—the neckwear, the initialed handkerchiefs and a never-ending assortment of practical gift articles.

YOU will find that a surprising number of men prefer to deal with the shops that cater exclusively to men. Specialization is the byword of the age and the man of affairs realizes that more satisfaction can be obtained at the strictly masculine shop than at the establishment where an attempt is made to serve everyone. For they man, woman or child. That is one reason why the average man buys his shoes at the Army and Navy Shoe Store, Court street. That, and because he is sure they will feel as good as they look, and, another element enters in. He knows he will pay no more than at the shops where inferior service and merchandise reign supreme. So, desiring the best in every possible respect, he turns to the Army and Navy.

BESS has a squinty-eyed, dimpled, new boy! He is a darling, and his gifts are wonderful! I took a rather unusual thing to him. It really was for his mother, only incidentally for him. "Where did you get it?" asked Bess. "I am crazy for real Mother Songs to sing to him." "The Central and Dives both have them," I answered. "And, imagine, only one dollar and twenty-five cents." A minute ago Bess phoned. "Can you get me three more copies of those Nine Mother Songs by Edna Groff Deihl?" she said. "I'm simply wild about them. I'll declare that Colicky Man is a wonder at curing colic. I want one for Jane, whose boy is just three months old; one for Mollie, although her children are grown (she can revive sentiment), and one for Margaret to use as encores on her programs. They are so unusual."

Help the Wife Out of Her Rut!

Would your disposition remain as congenial as your wife's if you had to use appliances in your work as antiquated as those she is using? That is, of course, if she still uses an old-fashioned treadle-operated washing machine or tub and washboard.

Think it over, and if you want to put a smile on her face and lighten her work, order an electric cleaner or an electric washing machine to be delivered for Christmas. Investigate our Club Plan.
