Huntsdale.

Seibert is a Reading Railroad employe and went hunting on the opening cay of the season with Benjamin Hefflefinger, George Rahn and Robert Hatton. On Tuesday he shot a fine buck, he told the magistrate. He says Tritt shot it several times after Seibert's shot had wounded it, and at the hearing told the justice of the peace Tritt disemboweled the animal before he had time to examine it. Hatton's companions said they heard Seibert shoot, but swore that Tritt said McManus had shot the deer before Seibert fired into it.

Tritt, who works at New Cumberland, said that since he was 14 years old he had hunted deer and had shot 14 of the animals in his lifetime. He asserted that McManus had wounded the deer and that it was bleeding badly.

McManus said he shot the deer in the mouth, the back, the leg and left side. McManus was awarded the deer which was a 13-pronged buck weighing 200 bounds.

the building, spreading to the front and then to the upper parts of the structure.

Boy Not Missed

That the Belty boy was in the building, did not become known until the fire had gained considerable headway. The father was not at home at the time the flames started, having gone to the post effice and then to a restaurant for a light lunch, before going to bed.

Returning and finding the building aflame, he made frantic efforts to locate the mother and two children, but it was not until a half hour later that he located the mother and one child. Then only was it learned that the lad was in the building and a search started.

Futile attempts were made to locate the lad by the firemen and other persons, and it was only by force that the father was prevented from entering the blazing structure. The body was not located until the flames had been entirely extinguished, about 12.30 o'clock, fully two-and-one-half hours later.

The death of the lad was the second death by violence in the family within hie past two years. The other death was that of a six-year-old son, who was killed by an automobile in front of his father's place of business almost two years ago.

The mother is in an extremely nervous condition to-day, and has not yet been told of the death of her son. She is at the Hershey House, where the family went this morning after the fire.
