The Two Voices

A NEW ROMANCE OF AMERICAN LIFE

CHAPTER I.

(Copyright, 1919, Star Company.) Hugh Rodney was in love with Doris Courtney. At least, he believed he was, and had believed it for some time.

As he sat and watched her one evening a week before his departure he found himself afraid to leave her without making open declaration of his love for her.

His father, who was in love with her, had taken Hugh into his office two years ago and had gradually taught him the intricacies of the business.

Hugh Rodney's father owned several large factories in various parts of the country. He had taken Hugh into his office two years ago and had gradually taught him the intricacies of the business.
