Disposing of Old Stock.

A pedlar of tin-ware, who had been in one of the Southern States, with farmer would do without it? his cargo of "notions," found but a limited sale for his lanterns, an article of which he had a large stock. In despair of getting rid of them at what he called a very reduced price, yet he found purchasers as scarce as clover in the sand-hills. At length, a tavero-keeper directed him to a farmer, who, he said, was very much in want of the article. To the house of this ready customer, went Jonathan, determined to get his trouble's worth out of him. ho was lounging by the side of the road.
