An Old-Time School Master.

There are many persons residing in Philadelphia, who, remembering back thirty years, can recall the honest face of a sturdy pedagogue from the North of Ireland, by the name of W., a stern discipli. parian, who believed that learning as often went in with "thwacks" as an inclination. Among the pupils of honest old W., was one who has since arisen to some distinction, but who, during his school boy days, was generally regarded as a thick-headed, lazy fellow, and as sure to get old W.'s attention in the "warming way" every semi-occasionally.

One day when Johnny had forgotten to study his lesson as usual, the old dominie blandly requested him to take his place on the floor, as he had a few words which he wished to say to him. Johnny of course stepped out with fear and trembling, and was greatly astonished to hear his stern teacher address him in a very kind and gentle tone :

"Johnny, my con," said W., "ye're of a good family, so you are."

Johnny, who was expecting a pretty sewere punishment, and had already begun to whine and dig his knuckles into his eyes, looked up in the greatest imaginable

"I say, Johnny," pursued the dominie, "ye're of a good family-d'ye under-family, as good a family as my own. I knew your father, Johnny, in the ould country and this, as a lad and a manand an honester lad and man, Johnny, I never knew ayther side of the big deep." "Thank you, sir !" said Johnny, with a pleasant smile, and a furtive glance of triumph at some of his playmates.

"And I knew your mother too, Johnny ; and a dear, sweet little girl, she was, afore she grew up and married your father, Johnny; and after that, she was a blessed wife, and as kind bearted and lovely a as ever left the blessed shores of ould Ire-

"Yes, sir-O, thank you, sir !" responded the delighted Johnny.

"Ab, Johnny, your father and mother and myself have seen some happy days across the great seas!" sighed the sentimental school-master; "days that I'm knowing now will never return to me ngain. And then your sisters, Johnnyyou've got fine histers, too, that I have known since they were toddlings, and which same now are ornaments to iny society, Johnny." "O, sir, I am much obliged to you!"

responded the happy pupil, scarcely knowing how to express the joy be felt at finding himself such a great favorite with his heretofore stern master. "And then there is yourself, Johnny, that I've known ever since your birththe son of my old friends and companions of me youth."

"O, thank you, sir !"

"Ab, yes, Johnny," went on the dominie, with somewhat between a sigh and a Unourno Wolfe of New York, whose name group, and some slight indication of tears;
"it's the whole blessed family I have Mr. Wolfe, in his letter to me, speaking of the long, so well, and so favorably, purity of his Wines and Liquors, says: Johnny; and now that I look back with pride on these same by gone reminiscences, I think I wouldn't be doing justice to Every bottle has the Proprietor's name on large, good for-nothing rascal, go without a Grocers in Philadelphia. good thwacking. Imagine the "latter clause," especially, sung among a lot of slaves, some of them having tasted or known something of the sweets of personal freedom, and all having notions more or less vague of its value! Is it any wonder that slaves are dangerous, when Secession orators by the thousands are constantly declaiming about Lib erty, and denouncing Slavery ?
