members of the legal profession remember the Hon. Mr. J., and recall, with bisgreat knowledge and ability, his fondness for an occasional glass of what Mr. Swiveller denominuted the "rosy." It was his practice, when detained in the Criminal Court (of which he was prosecuting Attorney) to keep in his desk a bottle-a short, black bottle-only used for the holding of old Bourbon.

During his career as State officer, a murder was committed in the eity, by a German, upon an old man. He was detected, imprisoned, and brought to trial. After the evidence was all in, a day was appointed for the delivery of speeches of the lawyers on both sides. Upon the arrival of the day, the Court Room was crowded -outside the bar by a large audience, and inside by members of the cloth-all impatient to hear Mr. J. speak. In arranging his speech, he had determined to exhibit to the Jury the weapon (a short, thick club) with which the deed had been committed ; and, in order to have it ready, had placed it in his desk, alongside of his bottle of "bitters." He arose, and, in summing up the evidence, excelled himself in the linking together of the chain of circumstances going to support the theory of the prosecution, and in close, logical ar- The Dimes Saving Institution of Legument, for which he was celebrated. Drawing toward that part of the speech at which the club episode was to be introdusurroundings of the scene where the atro- if cious deed took place; and, turning to the Jury, said :

"These, gentlemen of the Jury, were the circumstances under which the prisoner at the bar committed this awful deed, and this" [here he reached into his desk for the club, which he had placed in readiness] "is the weapon used in its commission," [holding up, to the astonished gaze of the assembled multitude, the bottle. duly labeled.] The Jury immediately exploded in the box, and the Court Room resounded with the roars of the audience. The lawyer subsided, with the truly "murderous weapon" in his "red right hand."

CONCESSION, VS. SUBMISSION .--- YOU have doubtless read the anecdote of the negro who traveled a long distance to hear the celebrated preacher, George Whitfield. It appears that for once this faithful preacher failed to meet his appointment, and in his absence some other clerical gentleman undertook to supply his place ; but of this new arrangement "Cato," getting upon the ground a little late, had not been informed. Of course, he had no suspicions that any other than the celebrated Whitfield was occupying the stand, and consequently soon began to feel the effects which the wonderful utterance of the great preacher was known frequently to produce. He began to slap his bands, shout, stamp and jump; becoming exhausted, he fell upon the ground, and rolled, tumbled and shouted-till finally, one of of all this floundering and uproar? "Why, mr.Wolte. in his frate and Liquors, says: purity of his Wines and Liquors, says: I is overcome by Massa Whitfield's marvellous preaching," was the answer. "Why, you fool, this is not Whitfield; it are pure a imparted, and of the best quality, and can be relied upon by every purchaser." dis no massa Whitfield ?" (at the same time jumping up and commencing to brush Whitfield ?- den Cato dirty hissef for nussing." Now, our compromising patriots at Washington, who, for the sake of "aving the Union," are on the point of eurrendering up the principles upon which thus Union was formed, will find, after all, that they have muddled themselves for nothing.— Wyoming Republic m. HAD HIM THERE—Judge C., a member of one of our best families, and him self occupying a high position, socially, was going up the river, last fall, on a slow steamboat; and, of course, entered into the familier companionships common to triots at Washington, who, for the sake of the familiar companionships common to travelers thrown together for a week with nothing to do. There was one man aboard, who, learning the Judge's name, announ-their music to discard the poincours stuff from their shelves, and replace it with Wolfes pure Wines and eed that it was the same as his own, and instantly claimed kin with him.
