

Choir Singing. Our amateur choir singers are too fond of "executing" difficult pieces, and confounding common people with reverberating resonances. The Rector of St. Bar-dolph takes off this style most laughably in describing the singing of the following stanzas:

"True love is like that profane old, Which pour'd on Aaron's head, Ran down his beard, and o'er his robes Its costly incense shed." In the prodigious effort, the splitting combinations of the several voices hither bore a resemblance to that only current poured on Aaron's head, and which "Ran down his beard, and o'er his robes Its costly incense shed." And over his robes Ran down his beard, and o'er his robes Its costly incense shed. His robes, his robes, ran down his beard, and o'er his robes Its costly incense shed. Ran down his beard, and o'er his robes Its costly incense shed.

The late Bishop Scouray being asked his opinion of this performance, replied that he paid no attention to the music, but that his sympathies were so much excited for poor Aaron, that he was afraid he would not have a hair left!

CONCESSION.—P. and W. met the other day, just after a fresh batch of "Crisis" news had come in, and says P: "I have been studying hard to think what concession we can make to the South what we have already made. We have conceded everything demanded, and everything imaginable. We have granted all they asked of us politically, and as to social compromise, we have sent them preachers to tar and feather—we have sent them 'school-masters' to insult and imprison; we have—in fact, I don't know what we could do for them that we have not done, and overdone."

"But I have thought of one more concession I suppose we might make," said W. "And what is that?" anxiously demanded P. "You observed the item in this morning's paper, that they barbelled up a Free State man, and rolled him into the Mississippi river the other day?"

"Yes—well?" "Well, if that thing is to be continued, it will cost them considerable for expenses. Don't you think we ought to make one more concession, just for the sake of fraternal peace, and—furnish them with barrels?"

VERY BAD, BUT VERY GOOD.—A party of negroes in Ithaca, New York, recently decided to have a ball. It took place about six miles out of the city, and they engaged a splendid six horse team to take them to the spot. The owner of the team, a well known white lively stable keeper of Ithaca, not wishing to entrust his team to the care of any one else, resolved to drive himself. After the ball was opened, one of the managers politely invited the gentleman to go in as a spectator if he pleased, and he did so. After a while, the negroes becoming aroused by the dance, the odor of the room became slightly objectionable. As the ball progressed, the aroma became stronger and stronger, until he concluded to leave. Just at that moment, he saw a number of darkies in consultation, and one of them approached him with much politeness, and informed him that the ladies requested that he should leave the room—that he regretted to make the request, but that "the ladies insisted, because, they said—he smelt too much of the stable!"

ONE WAS SMART, AND THE OTHER SMARTER.—A gentleman in Montgomery, Ala., came to the conclusion, the other day, that a little thrashing would do one of his negro men good, and so wrote a note to the police officer, requesting that thirty-nine lashes be administered the better, and gave the note to the victim for delivery, saying nothing of its purport. But, somehow or other, "the boy" did not like the errand, and on his way, meeting a colored friend, he requested him to leave the note at the guard-house, as he was in a hurry to go in another direction. The too-mischievous unfortunate duly delivered the note, pregnant with painful fate, and was duly tied up and treated to "what it called for," much to his consternation and misery!

A South Carolina paper threatens Dr Holmes, of the Farmer, with a coat of "Tar and Feathers." He gives the following capital turn to the threat: "And the feathers, too? What should we do with such 'togery' on our mortal body? We might do to set on goose eggs, and hatch Carolina stowaways, but 'wouldn't pay'."

Good Mr.—In the U. S. Senate, 4th inst. Chiquan, of North Carolina, complained the secession of the South to the going out of the ten tribes of Israel. Hale, of New Hampshire, replied that the tribes left the ark of the covenant behind them when they seceded, and went to destruction so completely that nobody but God knew what had become of them!
