This broadside pretty well silenced Miss Massy Twoshoes, and the rest of them, and almost overawed the old lady, who could not help in her heart, however, being proud of a daughter so much like herself, in the matter of having a tongue in her head. After considering a short time, she looked around, and fixed her attention on Miss York, whose good temper and discretion she looked to, in a great measure, for settling all their-family feuds. She accordingly called upon her for an

The old lady was struck dumb at this new mode of preserving the family union : "Go," said she at length, "go to your old father, receive his blessing, and quis our presence for ever, 'if such is your wicked will."

The refractory baggages obeyed her for once in their lives, and departed, crying out together, "Divided we stand, united we fall."

Thus was the great union of uncle Sam's family dissolved for ever. But the vengeance of Heaven overtook these unnatural children. Wherever they went, people pointed their fingers at them, and cried out, in their bearing, "Here are the foolish virgins, that calculated the value of a family union by pounds, shillings and pence, and left the house of their father because they could not have their own way in everything." Nobody would receive them, nobody would associate with them, and they wandered about in rags and beggary, a prey to each other, a scoff to the virtuous, a mark for the finger of scorp. They lived and died miscrably. Poor Carry, the ringleader in this uppatural affair, was inveigled into the arms of a wilv stranger, who, after robbing her of all she had, honor, virtue, reputation, and fortune, "flung her like a worthless weed away," and left her to perish by the roadside
