Union County O.K. Again!

A Clear Majority for every Candidate on our Ticket!

TUESDAY was a good day for the Election. There was a large turn out and a general good spirit prevailed. Notwithstanding the unprecendented efforts and strong hopes of the Democracy in favor of their popular candidate for Judge (for whom all else were sacrificed) our noble Farmers rallied again under the Old Union-Republican Flag, and gave an AVERAGE MAJORITY of SIX HUNDRED for the whole ticket. Reports as follows:

From Western New York.

FARMINGDALE, Allegy. Co., Oct 5.

As your citizens stood upon the bank of the swollen Susquehanna a week ago did one of them realize how portentous to the people at its sources and elsewhere, was its condition? I doubt it, for I have not seen in any paper an adequate account of the immense damage done by the heavy rains of Sept. 27th. On my way hitherward from Elmira their effect was painfully apparent in prostrated fences, and crops, in dismantled mills and bridges carried many roods by the remorseless flood. Arriving at Hornellsville on Tuesday afternoon last, I learned that for thirty miles westward on the line of our (N. Y. & E.) railroad bridges and culverts had been swept away by wholesale. The running of trains over the Western division was not resumed until Thursday last, when I arrived here via Buffaloe and Dunkirk. Daily we receive intelligence from the Genesee country and the region watered by the Allegany and Kanawha rivers of the same tenor as the above. The Genesee Valley Canal connecting south western New York with Rochester, will be useless until next spring. Along the Genesee, farm stock, crops and bridges were destroyed to an extent unascertainable in money value. From the great lumbering sections of Western Pennsylvania, almost bankrupt by reason of its dependence on a Southern market, come well authenticated accounts of the destruction of many lumbering mills, and waste of sawed and unsawed timber. That you may not think these are exagerated, it is sufficient to relate that a large house in our village, which I saw ten days ago standing on a high bank a hundred feet from the river—as you would say—was utterly swept away, and that a number of mill owners and farmers in our town (township) reasonably estimate their aggregate losses at $30,000.

The night express train from Dunkirk of Sept. 27th, plunged into a gap made by the unusual rain, at Scio, about 16 miles west of here, instantly killing the engineer, fireman and an ex-engineer riding on the engine, and rendering it a shapeless wreck.

A flying visit to Buffalo and Dunkirk, afforded ocular assurance of an extraordinary rush of freight eastward, and hence the prosperity of the carrying trade.

Wharves are lined with vessels of every class receiving and discharging cargoes, and storehouses are full to overflowing. Indeed the grand trunk lines refused to receive freights from all but their immediately connecting roads, these exhausting their means of transportation.

Cheese, 5 to 6 cts. per pound. Butter, 8 to 12. Apples, not enough for home use. "Democracy" heavy, and no quotations. For figures, I must refer you to the next election, when it is expected this stock will for ever disappear from the market. F.

THE GREAT EASTERN left England for her third voyage to America, 10th Sept. Two days afterwards, the rudder-pin broke, the helm became useless, a storm came on, and the huge hulk lay at its mercy—its inmates, with all the loose furniture and stores crashing from side to side so as to break the bones and bruise the persons of 15 or 20 individuals, while much of the stores &c. was smashed into minute fragments. By Saturday, the storm abating, and a temporary helm being made, the proud Eastern turned back and reached Cork harbor, a mammoth floating wreck.

☞We call special attention to the advertisement for the new National Loan. Liberal interest is offered—and if a National Bond is not safe, what paper security can be safe? Let our people talk it over, and by investing aid thus in saving our land from the horrors of a long civil war.

☞We have a letter from Dr. A. P. Meylert, Army Surgeon at Louisville, Ky. on file for next week.

☞We see the names of Dr. James D. Strawbridge, Brigade Surgeon under Rosencrans, and Geo.S.Kimble, not designated as to place.

From Campbell's Penn'a Artillery.

FORT ETHAN ALLEN, Oct. 1, 1861.

All being quiet here now, and having a leisure hour I will endeavor briefly to narrate the disaster of last Saturday night, so far as I witnessed the same. We were ordered to move our Battery (Barr's) in the road near Vandeverkin's house, about 8 o'clock in the evening, and proceeded, to the place named, forthwith. Upon our arrival here, we halted for further instructions. Mott's Battery soon joined us followed by Gen. Smith and most of the troops of his Division. The column was divided into different Brigades, and moved forwards. Mott's Battery was placed at the head of the column, and the first section of Barr's Battery next to it, and the second section in the rear of the column. The position assigned us was in the lead of the first section. We proceeded in good order fast as possible, with an advance guard of infantry and axemen to clear the road of the trees felled across by the Rebels. When approaching Ball's Cross Roads, we were startled by a volley of musketry, which we presumed was occasioned by our guard driving the Rebel pickets. When we arrived at the spot, we found however, they had fired at random into the woods, upon some of our pioneers who had got too far ahead, but without effect. We continued some distance, and then turned to the right into a narrow road, densely wooded on both sides. But our guns and caissons had just all got around the corner, when a brisk fire of muskets, or horse pistols opened upon us direct from our front. The light of the flash blinded us from seeing from whom it came, whether friend or foe. One of Mott's horses, and several of his men fell dead. Their horses frightened and turned the Battery, breaking and falling upon our section in a heap of confusion. Our horses could not stand the pressure, and also turned short around breaking the limber poles of our pieces, and several sets of harness, by their plunging and falling. Our guns were immediately put in position at the corner we had just before turned, and loaded with canister to repel any further attack. The dead and wounded of our horses, and also Mott's horses and guns, were then gathered from the wreck, and taken into a field by our side and rear. While this was going on, I stood with our cannonier, by our guns, in anxious expectations for further developments, when a fire of muskets, opened a short distance to our rear, on the same road we had come. It grew stronger, approaching towards us; a cry was raised, "They have got us, they have got with our rear!" and we were ordered to turn our guns and sweep the road. We knew our other section and other troops of our own must be there, or between, and we refused to obey the order. The firing soon ceased, and all became quiet, save the groans of the wounded and the hushed noise of gathering the dead. It was about one o'clock, Sunday morning, when these calamities occurred, and we watched in silence and sadness during the remainder of the night. The dawn of day revealed a sad scene, such as I do not desire to picture, or ever witness again. Knowing that most of the destruction, if not all, was the work of our own men, our sorrow was greater than any inglorious defeat could have made. But there is still a doubt about the firing upon the Batteries coming from any of our men, and it seems probable that a body of Rebel cavalry got into the road in rear of our advance guard, and did the harm. We were upon the level and the fire came from the declivity of the hill, which caused the balls to pass over all excepting those immediately in front, otherwise the volley might have killed most of our horses and men. One of our drivers remarked, "I might have caught the bullets if I would have held up my hand." This remark is not improbable, and gives an idea how narrow was our escape. The last firing in our rear was entirely among our own men, and seems to be one of those unaccountable fatalities for which "no one is to blame." Our second section was in the midst of it, but escaped with very little damage—several breaks of splinterlars, harness, &c., and several men slightly bruised by falling and tramping of their horses. During the day some of our infantry scoured the country and fired buildings. One excuse for this incendiarism is that they discovered at a large brick house, a fine young beef just cut up and full of strychnine. Gen. M'Clellan visited the scene of these disasters in the afternoon, and very much condemned the wanton destruction of so much innocent property. Our Battery kept its position until sunset, when the roads were blockaded, and we returned to our camp. We have now three days' rations cooked, and are ready to march to any point where the enemy may turn up. T. G. O.

HALIFAX, Oct. 9.—Dr. Hayes' Polar expedition arrived here this morning, in the United States. The party are all well. Two have died—August Sontang, the astronomer, and Gibson Caraltes. Dr. Hayes reached Smith's Straits on the 26 of August last year, but could not penetrate the strait with his vessel either last season or this. He wintered at Port Foulke, near Cape Alexander, and with a dog-sledge reached latitude 81 degrees, 35 minutes on May 18 of this year.

BOSTON, Oct. 9.—The subscriptions to the National Loan are coming in faster than at any previous time.

On the 4th inst. information was received that the rebels had landed a large force at Chicamicica and Kine Keet, near Fort Hatteras, and that an Indiana regiment posted there was retreating before them. Two war vessels were sent to the relief of the Indianians. The rebels were shelled from the Monticello, scattering with great confusion, taking refuge in the woods and rebel vessels, followed by our shells, and suffering a loss of two or three hundred.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 9.—All the banks in this city have resumed specie payments.

CHICAGO, Oct. 9.—The returns from the election in Iowa, yesterday, come in slowly. Those received indicate the election of Kirkwood (Republican) for Governor.
