ARMY LETTERS.

From a Lewisburger in the Northern-berland Company.

Harrison's Bar, Va., July 5.

I am still in the land of the living, on soil now sacred with the blood of many of our brave men. The Penna Reserves have fought in four of the most desperate battles recorded in history. We whipped the Rebels every time—but have most to regret that we could not bring away our dead and dying, and those unable to help themselves—but we were on the retreat, and in danger of being cut off from the main army.

The first action, Thursday, 20th June, was the prettiest and best managed of all. Our brigade mowed down the enemy in swaths, until 9 at night, when they fell back. I believe we might have held our point against ten times our number. But that was not the policy.

At 2 in the morning of Friday, 27th, we marched in good order to New Bridge, and halted. At 3 P. M., we were again engaged, our brigade in the hottest of the fight, for three hours, when our ammunition gave out, and reinforcements covered our retreat over the Chickahominy.

Saturday, 28th, we marched nearly all night, passing Savage station morning of Sunday, 29th, and marching until the afternoon, when we encamped at White Oak Swamp. That night, our 5th and the Bucktails were on guard in front of the enemy and almost amongst them, but all came in safe.

About 2 P. M. of Monday, 30th, while in line of battle, the grape and cannister whistling over our heads, we were ordered to a little rise of ground, where we laid down until the enemy were within 200 yards, when we charged and drove them across the field into a wood—but, then, being reinforced, they sent us back, and so it was kept up for about 4 hours, when the Rebels ceased firing. We laid down on the field for a little rest, while the Hospital department gathered in all the wounded of the camp.

Early Tuesday, 1st July, we went some 12 miles to the north bank of the James river, where was a part of our army. In the afternoon, the Rebels again assaulted our line, but were driven back for miles towards Richmond. Our division, being almost worn out, was left in reserve, but witnessed another hard fought battle.

On the night of the 10, we left Wheat Farm, and came 9 or 10 miles down the river to this point, where the whole army is now concentrated in lines of defence, and where Gen McClellan says he is going to rest and feed us up.

Day before yesterday, a Rebel brigade that was out on a scout threw 6 or 8 shells into our camp, which stirred up a hornet's nest, and the Rebel dave-devils are now safe in our hands.

It seems to me that the enemy were all posted, on coming up at different points, to cut off our retreat from the main army. But they were thwarted, and the manoeuvre from the Pamunkey to the James river is one of the greatest feats on record.

Among the prisoners captured by our Regiment in our last fight, was a commissioned officer who had peddled papers to us all last winter, at Pierpont—he ought to be shot as a spy.

I do not know the exact loss of our Regiment, but I judge nearly one half. On the 30th, our old Colonel—who was like a father to us all—fell, and also our Captain, and several of our boys. We also lost our Major, and our Brigade—so good a General as ever strode a horse.

James McFall reached here yesterday, quite well; he was sent from Mechanicsville to the White House, and thence by Fortress Monroe up here.

Annexed are the losses in the Taggart Guards, Co. B, 5th P. R.:

JOHN A. MAUS, Acting Orderly

Corp. JACOB K. MERTZ, of Slifer Guards, Co. D, 5th Pa. Reserves, writes to his parents, that in the second day's fight, they lost their knapsacks and harnesses, so that most of the Regiment have only what they stand in. He lost his Bible, but had picked up another.

In one engagement, the troops were all so mixed that at one time he could not see five men of one Regiment.

On the 30th, (third day's fight), Lieut. McFallen was wounded in the leg by a piece of shell. The Rebel sharpshooters were stationed on the tops of trees. Some of the prisoners seemed satisfied to submit, but others had to be knocked down before they yielded to their fate. Both sides were continually reinforced. The enemy was distinctly heard by the whole army—the low murmur of the crowd hushed into perfect silence. That was no dumb show. Just as the General entered the field, a brilliant rainbow was thrown across the sky, and remained arched over the field until he ceased to speak. Every one saw it, and thought of the "bow of promise."

Then we marched in review—that took some time. When our division had passed in review, it was followed by our army wagons in procession. Gen Foster said to Gen. Reno, "I see, what are those wagons for?" "They're to match your leather aprons." The Pioneers of the first division had leather and linen aprons and high hats—ours had but their stalwart manliness, their axes in slings, and their rifles. This corps of our regiment consists of 20 of our biggest men. At their head was Body—a most tremendous chap—we can't get clothes large enough for him. The others are six-footers at least, but they are boys to him. They are commanded by Lt. Orin, Co. A., and Serg. Thomas Reed of Lewisburg, and have had the hardest kind of service, burning and destroying bridges, felling trees, blockading roads, &c. They were in the rear at Camden, and destroyed all the bridges behind us on that memorable night. Able to do the hardest work and endure the most extreme fatigue, they are ably handled by these officers.

They stared at our Regiment that day on account of its size—the 2d Maryland being the only one near it. In discipline I'm sure we were not surpassed, though it looks like a steel-engraved picture to see those Massachusetts Regiments drill. Our Band did admirably, under the leadership of Lt. Arnold—who is full of fun, anecdote, saws and sayings, and can keep a crowd in a roar by his inimitable Irish. It was ordered that no more bands be mustered into service. I think this a mistake. On the day of battle, it is the duty of the band to carry off the wounded and succor those that are injured. They receive regular instructions—how to lift a wounded man, how to place and carry him on a stretcher—from the surgeon. Most nobly has our Band conducted itself on the field; at Roanoke, though fortunately none of us fell then, they labored for others all day; so at Newburg; and at Camden they were in the thickest of the danger ministering to the wants of the wounded. It is no sinicure, and doing the bravest work on the field, in all the reports I have never seen their names mentioned or their deeds alluded to. It requires cool courage, and a braver heart to do this work, than to rush with the bayonet upon the embrasure. A fine Company, though small, is Co. K, now under command of Lt. Kelly and Lt. Carman—Capt. Titus has of late absence owing to serious illness. They have always a larger number of men, in proportion, than others, reported for duty, and they have preserved their general health wonderfully. Their officers are very thorough tacticians, and their men show it. But if you wish to see bright barrels, clean accoutrements, and drill in its perfection, you should see Co's A and H, Captains Bolton and Bell. I'll bet on them, two to one, against any Yankee company. But I must not leave you stand on the parade ground, especially as it threatens rain, and Dick is inviting to dinner. Consider us marched home, and imagine my attack on the victuals. J. M. L.

P. S. Lt. Shorkley is Adjutant of our Regiment. Lt. Beaver is promoted 1st Lt. 1st Sergeant Campbell to 2d Lt. Corp. Wm. Allison to be Sergeant—since which time, Lt. Beaver has been seized with the mania for bugs; the amount, number, quantity, complexion, hue, and diversity, of what he has collected—the glass jars, &c., of the perversity—are wonderful. I hope he may never meet with the fate of Lady Jane's husband, though this propensity was the destruction of the old man.

We republish the following, which appeared only in a part of our Friday's edition. It is from a letter, dated 4th inst., from Lieut. Chas. D. Schaffli to his father, and gives a probably correct report of losses in the "Slifer Guards," Co. D, 5th Pa. Reserves:

Selection of Congressmen.

The coming election, the character of candidates for Congress will be looked to as well as their party affiliations. Correct principles and correct practices should be co-existent: but, unfortunately, they are not. Some of our Republican Congressmen have behaved as recklessly and foolishly as any of the other party—many of whom (except on a few votes) were just what all Republicans should be—true to their country. It is some times a task to decide whether to sacrifice good Principles on account of a defective representative—but there are many who do, for they hold that a bad man will more often go wrong than right, and they therefore support the "best man," regardless of party.

Our country requires our best men in our next Congress—men of experience, of integrity, of sound sense, of firmness, of courage—of known virtues and competencies. It does not need dissolute, or idle, or speculating Members. The People are in earnest, and need to be, in this matter.

Slavery formerly ruled this country by keeping her eldest and most experienced men in Congress year after year. The training and the "know how" are often worth more than votes. The experience of Speaker Grow, Colfax, Blair, &c., make them more than a match for any Southern. We therefore rejoice in the indications that our best and most faithful Congressmen in Penna. will be returned. We need ripe judgment, and rich ability, as well as stern, honest patriotism, as much in Congress as in the Army or Navy.

The Rebel guerrillas in Kentucky and Tennessee have shown unusual activity recently, and made some advances. The conspirators are evidently swelling their forces.

Burnside's force encamped at Newport News while he went on to Washington.

Gen. Pope is preparing for offensive operations in the Valley of Virginia.

Congress will probably adjourn this week.
