LEWISBURG, UNION CO., PA., TUESDAY, JAN. 20, 1863.

"THE UNION," established in 1814---Whole No., 2,601.

"CHRONICLE," established in 1843---Whole No., 980.

PUBLISHED SEMI-WEEKLY---
Tuesday Morning & Friday Afternoon.

Lieut. John B. Linn reached home, Saturday morning.

Capt. Philip Stolemetz was put into a hospital at Alexandria—is doing well.

J. Garrett Walker, A. B., is appointed Principal of the Public Schools, Uniontown, Pa.

We learn that the various Departments of the University at Lewisburg opened the Winter and Spring Session with an accession of students.

Capt. Joshua E. Wolfe, wounded at Fredericksburg, came home on the 7th inst., to complete recovery from his wound.

Miss Belinda Spigelmyer, of Middleton, is nurse at the Government Hospital, Washington—and Miss Annie Neff, (Low Dem. Ins't) at Frederick.

Friday last, we came up with some Centre county men of the Wm. H. Irvin's 45th P. V., who said their old Regiment was consolidated into four Companies, and they were going to recruit in Snyder county, Middleburg their head quarters.

Rev. Dr. Harbaugh's "Guardian" comes to us in a new dress, and illustrated by a beautiful mezzotint engraving, entitled "The Wife." It is now published by M. Kieffer & Co, Chambersburg, Pa.

Levi Renner, of Capt Owens' company, was reported in Richmond, having lost his left foot.

Paroled.—M'Fall of the Northumberland company, slightly wounded. Saylor, of company D, 5th Reserves—also York Woodward

Rev. J. R. Graves was the theological opponent of Parson Brownlow in the "Great Iron Wheel" controversy. Graves got to loving the Iron Wheel of the Rebellion, while Brownlow opposed it. Mr Graves recently made a sly trip through the North. On his return to Richmond, we see it stated, he honestly gave it as his opinion that the Northern masses were earnestly feeling the inhumanities of a war really impoverishing the South. For this honest expression of truth, GRAVES WAS ARRESTED, AND IS NOW LYING IN PRISON. Thus does the Iron Wheel "crush out" all intelligence from the dupes over which it rolls!

We copy in another column the call for a Teachers' Institute to be held in this Borough the last of the month. We direct the attention of all interested in popular education, to the proposed gathering. The duties assigned to the thirty-three different individuals, will naturally tend to make the exercises sufficiently varied to be interesting. Let there be a large and spirited gathering, and let all our people for once give all the teachers a warm and generous welcome. In this hour of a nation's agony, the truth is everywhere apparent that Ignorance and Treason go together and that Intelligence and Loyalty go hand in hand, as a general thing. The education of the masses, therefore, is the only safeguard of republican institutions, as was very correctly stated by the recent Institution of Northumberland county, and also by that of Snyder.

From the time the Rebels fired into the Star of the West, in Charleston harbor, (which Mr. Buchanan so blandly winked at) until the present hour, their motto has been "Disunion or Death" Every one of their acts, speeches and editorials since that, proves conclusively that they are determined to stand up to that motto to the very letter, allowing the Government the only alternative to recognize them as a separate nation, or assert its authority by force of arms. Notwithstanding the positive and oft reiterated assurance that no compromise which can be offered will be accepted, the Democratic party continue strenuously to urge the Administration to compromise, as though Mr Lincoln had the power to force an agreement upon the Rebels which they, under no circumstance will accept. Two are always required to make a bargain, and in this case there is no "party of the second part." Mr. Lincoln has the power to do two things: either to continue the war, or to stop it. By continuing it vigorously, it is hoped and believed that the traitors can be forced to surrender, and the Union saved. But to stop it—what would the result be? The nation, to begin with, would be split from the Atlantic to the Pacific! The immense debt would have to be paid entirely by the North, or, Mississippi like, repudiated. But that is not all. Another division would possibly take place, separating Ohio from Pennsylvania—the line running up the Ohio river to Pittsburg and thence to Lake Erie, or taking the summit of the Alleghenies. This would lead to other subdivisions, and who can tell where they would end? Then would arise trivial misunderstandings, and before many years—perhaps months—the whole nation, North and South, East and West, would be engaged in a series of wars, such as would appal humanity. Let those who are continually tripping up the feet of the Administration pause and think these things.

HARRISBURG CORRESPONDENCE.

Harrisburg, Jan. 15, 1863.

This is a "blue Friday" indeed. Early this morning, I was awakened by the rain upon the lime-like roof above me. My most apprehension of the liquid visitation was the "sound of many waters" falling as it in torrents, and making me shudder to think of the sailors, soldiers, and others exposed to the "pitiless pelting" of this cold, raw, January storm. It afterwards subsided into one of those regular, slow, gentle "pat, pat, patterings," which in childhood's glad time, as in sobered manhood's tranquil hours, so delight that I would lay awake all night to hear—but the music is too ineffectually soothing to resist, and it carries one away captive into Dreamland.

Harrisburg is getting to have a great number of mechanics and day laborers. Fog joined with rain to make the morning working hour extremely dark—and it was curious to see the lanterns flitting about and crossing at every corner. Even the sun could not dissipate the gloom—sheets of rain descended in dashes, and occasionally were driven by the wind in blinding fury against my window. "Members" were gone on a second vacation—markets and trade dull: in short, everything was awfully uninteresting to those who just then had nothing to do but to indulge in the dumps, yawn, and—growl.

But, about noon, "things" wonderfully revived. Out came the sun, with all his glory on; never smiled the sky so serenely blue; nor ever looked the fleecy clouds so beautiful. Dripping umbrellas were collapsed; "folks" condescended to salute each other, and be cheerful; the wind came up dry and bracing; and all seemed to think this a tolerable world after all.

Were some military genius to dissipate the gloom which overhangs the fierce contest between the Right, and Rebellion, o how soon should we all forget the long, fearful storm-night through which we are passing! and how would we hail the final triumph of Eternal Justice over Tyranny and Wrong! God speed the hour!

This rain must do damage where earth is so frozen as not to soak up such a deluge of water. The Susquehanna and its tributaries are swollen with a turbid current. But in this section the water is wanted—springs are dry, and wells low. A gentleman from Somerset says cattle upon their mountain glades have actually suffered for want of drink.

The election of our own RAMSEY as U. S. Senator from Minnesota, is hailed with delight in this quarter. He makes good, numerically, our loss of WILMOT, and is one of your reliables of "y' olden time."

Next Monday, is the election for State Treasurer. Without a dissenting voice, HENRY D. MOORE is the Republican candidate for re-election. His management of the State Finances has been such—as is acknowledged by all—that only party drill can cause his defeat. Happy will it be for the State, if Magrath succeeds, if he shows so fair a record.

Not a flake of snow to be seen, here—but they do tell us that ambitious people in Cumberland, Perry, and other counties north and west of us, are at least "going through the motions" of sleigh riding—a rather rough sledding, we guess.

W.

Down Among the Rebels.

Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 20, '62.

After a sojourn of some months in Kentucky, drinking daily draughts of "pure" Union sentiment from the Journal, diluted occasionally with an extremely high colored dose from the Democrat, I have wandered down into old Tennessee, nearer the heart of Rebeldom, where Gov. Andy Johnson holds the helm of state, and administers the Constitution and laws of the Federal Government faithfully. Here the right men in the right place. Having been so long under the influence of Kentucky Unionism, I was at a loss to know precisely upon what platform I was standing. Many Kentuckians insist, that a truly loyal man may abuse and malign the President and the Administration, and oppose almost every movement of the army to crush the Rebellion that does not in every respect coincide with the opinion of the great State of Kentucky. Having heard and read so much of this "Union sentiment," I began to doubt my position, and were I asked concerning it, I should have answered as Pat did when interrogated as to his "faith"—"and is it me belafe that you want, Sir? an' sure it's the same as the Widdy O'Brady's." "And what's that, Pat?" "Why, ye see, I bought a pig of the widdy, and she belaves that I'll niver pay her, an' faith I belave the same." And so, I refer you to the Louisville Journal—for my "faith" was almost like that. But here in Tennessee, the atmosphere is purer and better. I like the city—the country—the people. There's a dash of Yankee enterprise, that suits me, and many other features, of which I will give you a hint.

Nashville is in "heaps"—Boston fashion—as if a small earthquake had rolled it over a couple of times. Before you get down the hill, you are half way up another. As a city, it is picturesque and beautiful. When peace and thrift come again, no prettier spot can be found. Now the army has possession, and Uncle Samuel's cavalry, wagons and military hold carnival in its streets. The State Capital building is unsurpassed in elegance and solidity, of a fine architectural model, and is highly creditable to the State. Now it is strongly garrisoned and a formidable stockade surrounds it. On either angle, "power mouthers" command the city, in full view of Fort Negley, commanding the West and South. Washington is not better fortified.

The landscape and country, I have seen some more beautiful. The gently rolling bluffs, and finely wooded hills remind me of Pennsylvania on a "reduced scale," as the exquisites say, but the fine old forests of sugar maple and lived beech, with cedar for hemlock, gave me a homelike feeling.

I like Tennesseans. They are a frank and open hearted people—having much of the Yankee snap about them. If you meet a Rebel among them (by no means rare) you know it; his garb is of such well defined cut and color one can not mistake him. If a Union man, you will find him "Square on the platform." He is for crushing this terrible Rebellion at any cost or sacrifice. He is foolish enough to believe that negroes can build forts, dig ditches, raise corn and cotton, &c., while rebels shoot Union men; therefore, he is for relieving Sambo of his labor of love, and giving him an opportunity to choose for whom he will work. Not so in Kentucky (with a few honorable exceptions). Their "belafe" is that the "nigger" can not, does not, and will not work, and is utterly incapable of aiding in the Rebellion. Consequently, the difference between the Union men in Tennessee and Union men in Kentucky is, in plain English—Kentucky says, "The Constitution as it is and the nigger as he was—but especially the nigger." Tennessee says, "We will put down this Rebellion. Gentlemen Rebels, keep your negroes out of the corn and cotton fields, where they have so long supported you in this grievous Rebellion, if you wish them let alone. But understand, we shall not punish them to help you to destroy our Government, nor trample under foot the old flag, after the first day of January, 1863."

The Nashville papers have the true ring, and it was refreshing to find true loyalty to the Government so far down in Rebeldom. I have not seen a Northern paper (except the Herald) for a long time; and, as I intimated, I was badly backslidden; but with the aid of dailies, and a copy of the Tribune which I found in a news office (price one dime), I sat down and commenced the work of self examination on the main question, loyalty, and shortly came out with the scales all off my eyes.

Nashville is one grand encampment. On all sides, the army of Gen. Rosecrans whitens the landscape with its tents. Tattoo and reveille are the morning and evening music. Sad havoc is going on among the beautiful groves of forest trees; but such is the terrible waste of war. All must suffer, whether friend or foe. Wherever a great army encamps, with it some destruction and waste, it is inevitable.

I spent a day or two with the army division of Gen. Davis, on the Franklin pike. The General's head quarters were on the lawn in front of a Mr. T.'s mansion, upon whose beautiful premises nearly the whole division were encamped. West of Mr. T.'s fine mansion, was a forest of sugar maple, and the principal music greeting us from that direction was the ring of the woodman's axe. Yankee soldiers, you know, can chop and the falling of those stately old trees. Mr. T. was a Rebel, and as the trees fell crashing down the old gentleman would groan audibly, saying "I'd rather hear a cannon." But he is being converted, and ere the last tree falls I think he will be for the Union at any cost. His wife was a pleasant lady, and quite friendly; and I had occasion to thank them for their kind hospitality. The daughter, a fine, intelligent lady, quite pretty, was shy of us, and, with a toss of the head, snifted at us as if she saw something. She was a full-fledged Rebelless, and I could not restrain a laugh at the little sinner scowled at the "contemptible Yankees." But she is not "iron clad;" brass buttons and shoulder straps have done wonders. I am informed that she, too, is changing her mind, and, like the "Widder Bodotte," when she saw Elder Sniffles under the shady tree concluded to be a Baptist, so this pretty rebel is concluding to be a Yankee Lieutenantess.

NASHVILLE.

John R. Rishel of Mechanicsville, Montour Co., died in hospital at Yorktown a few days ago. He belonged to Capt. Winner's Company of drafted militia. He refused to hire a substitute, believing it the true policy to serve his country personally, and not expose another in his place.

The blacksmiths of Danville and vicinity have formed an association and raised the prices of their work about 25 per cent. above former rates. They also make a distinction between cash payments and working on credit.

New U. S. Senators.

Alexander Ramsey, who commenced life in Harrisburg, Pa., as a carpenter, is in place of Rice, Democrat—a Rep. gain.

Zacharia Chandler (Rep.) is re-elected from Michigan—no change.

Wm A Richardson is elected from Illinois in place of Browning—a Dem. gain.

Bayard (Dem. Rebel sympathizer) re elected from Delaware.

Charles Sumner is elected for the third time from Massachusetts.

The Director of the Mint's report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1862, has just been published. The quantity of money coined in the country, though large, has not been equal to that of the preceding year. Various and obvious circumstances limited the supply of the precious metals since the war commenced. The whole coinage has amounted to 28,-250,000 pieces of all denominations of coin, in value $30,020,058.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has decided that any revenue stamp, except the proprietary, can be used for its amount on any instrument.

A son of the notorious George N. Sanders was captured recently off Charleston. He had dispatches from Europe, one of which ended with the request by the Rebels to "send us aid, or we perish."

The Rebels declared, at Vicksburg, that all the Union officers falling into their hands would be shot, and the soldiers set to work on the fortifications, in retaliation of President Lincoln's Proclamation. Yet they deny that the Proclamation will effect them.

At Vicksburg, as customary with the Rebels, our dead were robbed and denuded. Their papers teem with disgusting boasts of their Christianity, honor and respectability. Their actions prove them worse than savages.

QUERE.—In the Franklin Almanac for 1863, among much other valuable information, is a table of the "Governments of the World," in which the established religion of each State is given. The only two in which "universal toleration" is allowed, are the United States and Liberia, both Republics—one of white men, and the other of black men.

We are pleased to observe that some of our citizens are refusing the shinplaster currency. This is the only way to get rid of it. Government currency is getting sufficiently plenty to have individual currency suppressed. We would advise our citizens to refuse anything but Government currency and that issued by individuals in this borough, who are responsible and will redeem what they issue.—Millersburg.
