It was the thirty-first of May, About the hour of one, The Rebel force from Richmond Came proudly marching on, With overwhelming numbers-It was plainly their design To crush our gallant Casey's force, And penetrate our line.

The hill-tops and the valleys With Rebels seemed to swarm, And dashing down upon our camps, Scarce gave us time to form : But 'round the banners of the free We rallied with three cheers, With blow for blow we met the foe Like Yankee volunteers.

Our Gen'ral, Silas Casey, Seemed in his prime again, With sword in hand he faced the foe, And cheered his gallant men; "Stand firm, my boys!" the vet ran cried, "Although they're two to one, We'll show them that our Union troops From danger never run."

This gallant force was soon exposed To front and flanking fires, And, when overwhelmed by numbers, Reluctantly retires, Yet with the greatest valor fought, Disputing well the ground, While shot and shell amid them fell, Fast dealing death and wound.

In praise of Casey's forces Too much can not be said, Although it was reported That they all basely "fled!" For full five hours they fought their foe, When half of them were slain, And held the Rebel force in check, Till re-inforcements came.

Long live the brave artillerists! Their work was nobly done, They neither fled nor faltered, But stead'ly worked each gun; Into the Rebel's columns Our iron hail fast pours, Plows bloody furrows through their ranks, And mows them down by scores.

All honor to brave CASEY! All honor to his men! They, 'gainst a far superior force, Most nobly did contend; They bore the brunt of battle, Saved us from being slaves-Millions of voices shout the praise Of Casey's gallant braves ! GILBERT G. PARKER.
