Ber Religion generally (but not peecs sarily) suffers during war. The South do feel the evil, most lamentably, in almost every section. But layal churches in the Loyal States suffer little except from the consorious annuvance of those who think more of Politics than of Christianity-from the absence and death of active members in service-and some times an undue "rendering unto Crewr" more than "anto God." Where united in their views, the churches North enjoy much prosperitywhile churches divided as to the practical duty of the day, and churches South in open Rebellion, are dwindling, or becoming extinct. The numerous revivals at the North are encouraging. The National Benevolent Societies pecuniarily seem not to feel the absence of Rabel support.

Mr. Lincoln is no admirer of war. He comes from a stock which had connection with a sect that has been distinguished in this and other lands for its efforts in behalf of universal peace ; and he had no doubt inherited a detestation of war, unless it is a war such as that now maintained by our government-a war for self-preservation, and for all that is essential in civilization and dear to the
