From the Sunbury Democrat-Just before Election "The Election takes place next Tuesday. Amendment shall be carried; but this is no desire and intent to eleas the people and the soldier, and re-elect Lincoln by a fraudulent use of the votes. Having everything in their owa hands, they can, and, from the rascalities heretofore practiced by Lincoln's subor-

The editor also says it allows the " soldiers in the military service of the United States, wherever they may be located on the day of election, to vote." But the truth is, the law reads, the "qualified electors of this commonwealth in actual military service," &c., shall be allowed to vote. The use of the word "soldiers," instead of "qualified electors in military service," seems intended to confirm the opinion which had been carefully circulated among the people, that all "soldiers." whether colored, minors, or aliens, could vote. This of course was an abominable imposition. But it, in connection with imposition. But it, in connection with property, or extinguished the fismes.
