slightest pretexts. For, remember these Southern gentlemen have slaves to toil for them; their ! own bread is secure ; they are idlers, and a foray across the border would be as much sport, for them, as it was in the last contury to Rob Roy and his clausmen. They would like nothing better than to "harry the Yankees," and they would al-ways be able to raise a company, a regiment a brigade, a division, for such an expedition.

But it will be said, we should punish them for such outrages ; the United States Government would still be powerfug enough to command and enforce respect That is just where we should make a fatal mistake. The Confederacy is now weaker unble as to their merris and worth only. than it over will be again. The power, In the year 1862, Messre, J. S. MARSH & than it ever will be again. The power, the means, the prestige of the slaveholders, all are nearly broken. If, now, we are unable to beat them; if, now, we give up the contest; if, now, we permit ourselves |] to fail, they will never fear us hereafter; they will know that they may do nearly what they please against us, without fear. For, they will say, we whipped the Yankees when we were weakest, and they will never dare attack us sgain.

But, the reader replies, they would make a great mistake-they would draw down destruction upon their heads if they should not upon any such theory; we should go to war and annihilate their power if it cost us every cont and every Now this is true but why is it not better and cheaper to "make one job of
