

Harrisburg Correspondence. SATURDAY, SEPT. 3. Last evening and this morning, I was among the hundreds of lookers-on at the place where, semi-weekly, thousands get their food—the market house and streets adjoining. Evenings before market morning, is a favorite time to sell vegetables, and the gas or other lights used, during warm weather, make it a place of resort where one never tires. This morning, a man—not content with big prices—came with "pound balls" of butter which were under weight, and his whole stock was justly tho' "arbitrarily" confiscated. But all dealers are not "rogues in grain" nor hard-hearted in butter. A good-souled volunteer's wife, sent in change yet desirable butter-spread for the bread of three little ones, said to a farmer, "Sir, can not you afford to throw off something for a family whose husband and father is fighting your battles at sixteen dollars a month?" The man replied "loyal," for he said, "I can get fifty cents for every pound, but you shall have what you want at 45." So she saved 10 per cent. by a direct appeal. I asked a chap, who weighs about 250, if it was not too hard work for those slender females, young and old, to lug home their full market baskets, many of them going a great distance? He said no—he rather thought they liked it. But a lady I once inquired of, said it was not desirable—she fainted away the first time she attempted to carry her provisions thus, and the loads gave side-aches or other pains. But the producers generally are stout enough for their work. Many farmers' daughters, I am told, rise at midnight, harness teams, and come in by early dawn, to dispose of surplus produce of forty different sorts more or less. For wives and mothers, such girls are "worth having" in more respects than one.

News of the capture of Atlanta, in an authentic form, was on the "Telegraph" bulletin board this morning, but not on Cooperhead's. The latter "did not know" it was true—not official—brags of the Shoddyites, &c. They seem hard to be convinced of anything favorable to the Union cause, but they hear of our losses early—don't doubt their genuineness—and even magnify them.

For the first time in Harrisburg, visited the Mayor's Court, in search of a gentleman for whom I had to wait an hour. Gen. Boutwell, the Mayor, had a military education. Now, in the afternoon of his life, he is not in the field, but is taking bread and dispensing justice. He had a new recruit "up," charged with stealing hats. It appeared probably the sad, silly-looking chap, who only bought the stolen goods, while drunk: so he was dismissed with a lecture, after paying the costs and restoring the property. Like others here, he had more money, for bounty, than he had ever seen before, and felt bound to get mellow and make a fool of himself as a first step to his liquidation. (By the way, these "arbitrary" acts of the Market Clerk and the Mayor, would be actually "unconstitutional" in the President.)

Next, a woman in black came to tell of a trouble she had with some neighbor, and although she appeared perfectly innocent, the Mayor evidently suspected her equally at fault in the quarrel. Two other poor-looking women—one weeping and wringing her hands in a corner—were there, seemingly friendless, and "alone" whether present to answer for wrong doing alleged, or to seek redress for sufferings endured, I did not learn. Left, rejoicing in my soul that so few of the females of our country are in the unhappy condition of too many who through towns and cities without any certain, clear, definite knowledge of the way they are to obtain a fair and honorable livelihood.

My business closed, ready to leave, seek the train, and find a seat about the usual time—1.40. Car full of people anxious to go—who must be home to-night—"why don't they start?" We soon hear that "the train is a little behind time—two hours late—just left Hanover Junction—uncertain when they come—four hours behind," &c. To pacify passengers, our car is butted and pulled about various times, and the puff and blow of solitary traveling engines often disappoint our hopes. Persons who bade good-by and shook hands, more or less hours ago, appear, and are "Glad to see us back again—how did you leave them in the Lewisburg?"—a pleasant day—delightful evening," & various other quizzical comments to ameliorate or aggravate the discomfort of sitting in a car five or six hours waiting the arrival of a body which might come like an unknown comet and find one not ready to take the desired advantage of it.

When I had read all the papers—except a "Patriot & Union" which a rascally newsboy imposed upon one or two solid Union men as "the evening paper"—my attention was directed to an elegantly dressed, fair-skinned person, just opposite my seat. (In the grocery just above that "McClellan restaurant" busy eating out one knee reposing upon the other, and chatting with the soldiers of all sorts who thronged about. The expression of the countenance as our eyes happened to meet, and the contour of the neck as the head was thrown one side, were strong evidences, even to one never curious to observe, that the person was a woman in man's clothes; and I hardly expressed the opinion to the gentleman by my side when a policeman appeared, invited the person to go to some officer, and a man accompanied them. The story soon leaked out—they were husband and wife—the latter dressed in male attire, by authority, for some purpose not made public. The wife was a fair match in size for her husband, and with her care (which she gracefully twirled) and her easy manners supported her new character pretty well; yet form and features were tell-tales, and her shrinking eye told that it was an oppressive effort at an unnatural position for some end unknown to your dependent.

—Well, it is 7 o'clock—here rolls up the Northern Central Railway train—and we are off. "Good-bye, Harrisburg!" with your varied characteristics, good and bad—farewell! Our speed is decidedly fast for this road, and we dodge many stopping points supplied by the Accommodation which runs between Sunbury and Harrisburg. A rather good-looking, well-dressed, stout, six-foot young man, comes in to our car, boasting how he had "jerked up" a man in another car, who occupied a whole seat. Soon, the same fellow again
