RIDDLE & CO., EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS. PITTSBURGH:

FRIDAY MORNING, JAN. 4, 1861.

Prayer and Humiliation To-Day.

The President of the United States has appointed the first Friday of January as a day of national humiliation and prayer. Now we have not an objection in the world to offer when men would pray. In itself prayer is good; but prayer alone, or even with all the humiliation that sackcloth and ashes can express or symbolize, as an accompaniment, can hardly avail any man in the circumstances of Mr. Buchanan. What are those circumstances? But we almost fear to ask what they are.

His hand is apparently on the helm, and yet he refuses to steer! He prefers to turn up his eyes in quasi-pious style crying Pray! Pray! and let the ship, meantime, drift whithersoever the winds and currents will take her. Hence, to those aboard, there is cause of fear in referring to the said circumstances. But spite of the disadvantage—spite of the dead hand—spite of the deceit of Mr. Buchanan's hypocritical cant—some more trusty hand—the hand of a man—not of an imbecile, besotted dotard—will no doubt in the hour of extremity be stretched forth, and "from the noble, danger, will pluck the flower, safety!" But it will be the hand of a true man; a man that believes in God—not merely by the "Credo! Credo!" on his lips, but with true faith in his heart, and true and faithful works proceeding from that faith, daily worked but with honest and capable hands. If the people of Pittsburgh, who remember a certain letter of Mr. Buchanan's which had some celebrity in its day—especially as the text on which John Covode wrote a large volume of commentary, which we think is yet extant in some libraries—we say, if the people who remember those things, wish to make a fit commentary on the act of Mr. Buchanan in appointing this day as a day of prayer and humiliation, they will pray indeed, and greatly humble themselves—but in a form and from a reason, which Mr. Buchanan would be little gratified or edified to hear. They will be humbled exceedingly, before God, because in righteous judgment he raised up such a one as he to be ruler over them, and will pray deliverance from him with a most devout fervor! Nor is this a harsh speech, when we see what this man has done—what a charge that was committed to him, he has put in peril. But, thank God, whose name he has so often taken in vain, the danger can and shall be averted! For even by that false and feeble hand of his, which has been like a treacherous phantasm hand, seen, but never felt, on the wheel which simple, deluded people thought was steering our good ship of state, he has (even by the drifting system of pilotage) brought us where the hoarse music of the breakers on a lee shore, has at length piped a call which will yet save the ship, even in spite of its sham pilot.

GEN. CAMERON'S VISIT TO THE PRESIDENT ELECT.—We find in the Harrisburg Telegraph a reference to the speculations that have been afloat for the last few days, as to the course and object of Gen. Cameron's visit to Mr. Lincoln. Having made inquiry, (says the Telegraph,) and being enabled from information obtained, we know to be entirely reliable, to gratify public curiosity on the subject, we feel at liberty to state, that Gen. Cameron proceeded, on Friday last, to Springfield in consequence of a special request, made by President Lincoln, accompanied with the intimation of his intention to tender, in person, a place in his Cabinet to the General, and his desire to meet and confer with him on the condition of public affairs. We learn, further, that a very full consultation, on the affairs which now engross the attention of the country, was had at Springfield, between President Lincoln, General Cameron and Judge Bates, who had also been called there, and who, it is already well known, has been tendered, and has accepted, a place in Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet. Thus called upon to serve the public under the incoming Administration, in another position than that which he now so ably and satisfactorily fills, we have no doubt of Gen. Cameron's acceptance of the honor conferred upon him, but have not yet learned the place assigned him, though we doubt not it is either the Treasury or War Department, probably the former.

Northern Sentiment United.

Under the heading "The Country Sold," the Cleveland Plain Dealer—a straight-out Democratic sheet—says of the recent events at Washington:

"The South Carolina Commissioners as they are called, but in fact "Emissaries and Conspirators" against the government, are at Washington and in secret consultation with the President and his Cabinet! What a pity there was not a ton of Hazard's powder under the White House, with Old Hickory at the outer end of the train. Wouldn't he blow them higher than the Tories of the revolution ever were!

But this partying with the enemies is not all the insult the nation is subjected to by these bandits. These Rebel Disunionists demand of the President to know 'if he ordered Col. Anderson to evacuate Fort Moultrie.' The trembling old dotard replies meekly that 'he did not.' Then the Dictators require that 'Anderson be ordered back to Moultrie,' and the dispatch says, 'The Cabinet were considering the last proposition.' * * Our fathers fought through one revolution against tyrants more noble than these, and had it only needs a few more Southern democratellions like these now enacting at Charleston and Washington to fire the whole Northern mind up to the fighting pitch. It will then become a question of patriotism and not of party. It will not be, who shall rule the country, but whether we shall have a country to rule."

MR. JAMES BURTON, postmaster of Grantsville, Allegheny county, Md., has filled that position for twenty seven years, receiving his appointment originally from General Jackson. The Frostburg Gazette, from which we derive the information, says that during his entire official career Mr. Burton has never missed a single mail—has never been out of his office one whole day, at a time—has never made a serious error connected with his duties—has never used, nor been used—and never used tobacco or liquor.—Exchange.

[It is refreshing to meet with such a "modern instance" as the above. How far from the good town of Grantsville Mr. Burton would have to travel before he could be brought face to face with one like himself—we fear the Post Office Directory could give us no assistance to find out! We would that we had many Mr. Burtons to commend to Mr. Lincoln for re-appointment to office.]

"IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT."—Perhaps this doctrine had an even earlier birthday than that assigned to it in the following, which we take from Forney's Press; but meantime, we may believe that some good Mysheer brought it out in the days when New Amsterdam was being built, and transmitted it somehow to those who have passed as its authors, in modern days.

"Neither to Mr. Seward nor Mr. Lincoln, nor even yet to the Buffalo editor, name unknown, belongs the honor of discovering or originally promulgating the doctrine of the 'irrepressible conflict.' William the Silent was familiar with it nearly three hundred years ago, when he said to the States of Holland, 'Tis impossible that a chariot should move evenly having its wheels unequally proportioned: and so must a confederation be broken to pieces, if there be not an equal obligation on all to tend to a common purpose.'"

APPRECIATED!—The Washington correspondent of the Methodist, mentions a fact in connection with the recent speech of Senator Pugh, which we have seen nowhere mentioned in like terms. After speaking briefly and loosely of the speech, the correspondent said: "When it was finished, Mr. Pugh's hand was at once seized by Senator Davis of Mississippi; Wigfall, Iverson and Clingman, and Brown were not much behind, and Berkeley, of Mississippi, actually hugged the Senator, embracing him standing in his place in the Senate.

THE ORDER FOR THE REMOVAL OF THE GUNS COUNTERMANDED.—By dispatches received from Washington, yesterday, we learn that orders have been issued countermanding the removal of the guns from this city. It seems that since Mr. Floyd's resignation they are not wanted at the Texas fort. This shows that the fears of our people, as originally expressed, were not groundless.

Special Correspondence of the Daily Pittsburgh Gazette.

HARRISBURG, January 3.

Eds. Gazette: The Senate did but little to-day but hear the Governor's Message. The Select Committee on the State of the Union reported Mr. Smith's resolutions with amendments, and they were made the order of the day for to-morrow, when they will undoubtedly pass. The Democrats were at first disposed to vote for them; but the indications to-day are that they will vote against them.

The Governor's Message has caused general disappointment, as it was hoped that he would take strong ground against the Disunionists. He shows that a State cannot constitutionally secede; that secession is rebellion; that our law of 1847 is not unconstitutional; and that Pennsylvania is not amenable to the charges of bad faith made against her by the South. So far, so good. But after thus maintaining the dignity of Pennsylvania, he demeans himself and belittles the State by recommending the repeal of the laws he has shown to be perfectly proper, by recommending the restoration of the Missouri Compromise, which he says was properly repealed in 1854; and by recommending the Legislature to grant permission to slaveholders to come into Pennsylvania with their slaves and sojourn or pass through with them.

The House did little to-day beyond electing the subordinate officers. This was a job of two hours, and there was no other business introduced. Mr. Randall's resolutions will come up to-morrow. Mr. Williams is writing resolutions of the right stamp, and will make a stirring speech when they come up.

The appointment of Gen. CAMERON to the Cabinet will render necessary the election of two U. S. Senators. It is not improbable, therefore, that a postponement may take place, in order to elect both together. E.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Special Dispatches to "The Press"

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1, 1861.—During the last two or three days every patriotic heart here, acquainted with the real state of affairs, has throbbed with the deepest anxiety. The root of the whole difficulty has been the unfortunate timidity and vacillating nature of Mr. Buchanan, which he has not been able to subdue even at a moment when considerations of the highest importance should have compelled him to assume and maintain a position of indexible firmness.

Your readers can form no ideas of the pressure brought to bear upon him by Southern Senators, Congressmen, and other influential sympathizers with the Secession movement, to induce him to compel Maj. Anderson to abandon Fort Sumter. Not a stone has been left unturned, and day after day, entreaties, threats, appeals, arguments, and every possible expedient, is resorted to force him to change the present judicious military arrangements at Charleston.

The special necessity of the present hour is that the voice of the people of the North, without distinction of party, should make itself heard at the Presidential Mansion. Your people should remember that, in a great crisis like this they still have some claim upon the ruler of our country, no matter what may be their opinion of his past and present policy, and they should not be backward in stimulating him to a discharge of his duty. When traitors mine patriots should countermine. While he is urged to betray the country on the one hand, he should be earnestly appealed to to prove faithful during the short period yet remaining of his official term.

In this spirit the Northern and Northwestern Democratic members of Congress have called upon him, to implore him to sustain Major Anderson. Let his political friends in your State, and all others who possess the least influence with him, at once pursue a similar policy.

Several times, quite recently, it was feared that he was on the point of wavering, and that Messrs. Black, Stanton and Holt would thus be compelled to resign, leaving the whole government completely in the hands of those who seek its destruction, as the only men from whom the President could gain sympathy or support.

The national flag is hoisted to-day on many private houses.

Parts of Benjamin's speech were hissed by the galleries.

It is feared that there is a well organized scheme to simultaneously seize all the national forts on the Southern seaboard.

Black, Stanton and Holt are doing their best to induce the President to sustain Anderson. If they should be forced to resign, what could be expected of any Northern men who would take their places?

It is said that, on hearing of Major Anderson's moving to Fort Sumpter, Floyd, without consultation with the Cabinet, sent an immediate order to him to return to Fort Moultrie, even if he was to die in the last ditch, to which Anderson, with Spartan brevity, immediately replied, he preferred to die at Sumter. Floyd has been acting all along with the traitors.—Without the knowledge of the President, and secretly, he has been ordering arms and ammunition South for many months. Startling to relate, Toucey is also playing in the hands of the Disunionists.

The revenue cutters are under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, and it is feared that the recent capture of the revenue cutter at Charleston was facilitated by the connivance of a high Federal official.

The friends of the Union, even those who yet move in Administration circles, are earnestly inquiring where is the Home Squadron, and why is it not now stationed at important points on our coast? It is to be feared that Toucey has designedly made it unavailable, as far as possible, for the enforcement of the revenue laws in Southern ports.

The scene in the Senate to day was the most intensely exciting that was ever witnessed in that chamber. Senator Benjamin, of Louisiana, who, it had been reported, would make a conciliatory speech, gave out that he would make a parting secession speech,—and announced that which drew an immense audience. Every corner was crowded. The lobbies were full. Senator Benjamin spoke calmly throughout, but the character of his speech at the close opened up to every one the new era in national affairs. His closing declarations, that the South "did not," "then the Dictators require that 'Anderson be ordered back to Moultrie,' and the dispatch says, 'The Cabinet were considering the last proposition.' * * Our fathers fought through one revolution against tyrants more noble than these, had it only needs a few more Southern democratellions like these now enacting at Charleston and Washington to fire the whole Northern mind up to the fighting pitch. It will then become a question of patriotism and not of party. It will not be, who shall rule the country, but whether we shall have a country to rule."

On the 29th of November, the anniversary of the Polish Revolution of 1830, there was a political demonstration in the theatre at Lemberg, and a fraternization of the Poles and Ruthenes. On the same day the students at Cracow committed an assault on M. von Czerkawski, an Imperial employee, who is opposed to the introduction of the Polish language into the public schools. The troops were called out, and under their protection M. von Czerkawski was able to get to the railway station, and to leave for Lemburg in a close carriage. There has recently been a movement of Prussian troops towards the Grand Duchy of Posen, and Russian forces have been pushed forward to the western frontier of the Kingdom of Poland. The Austrian Government keeps a watchful eye on Galicia, but there is no reason to believe that the garrisons in that Province have been reinforced.—Information has been received here that a great depot of arms is to be formed in the Danubian Principalities: in fact, artillery, rifles, ammunition, &c., have already been sent by the Sardinian Government to the Sultan.

THE WHITE HOUSE AND ITS TENANT.—The annual reception day at the White House must have given the President some sense of his position with the people. Nothing so dead and blighting has ever been felt in the east room, as this refusal of men of all ranks to do even the commonest honor to the chief executive of the nation. So much has he earned for nursing traitors in the Cabinet, traitors in the executive service everywhere, and secession among the weak and wicked of half a dozen States of the Union. Every man instinctively feels that the course of the President and his advisers has brought this disaster upon us more than anything else. For months and years the organs and men of his most immediate counsel have done their utmost to falsify the sentiment of the North, and have constantly declared, apparently by authority of the President himself, that a dismissal of the present dynasty would justify if not demand a dismemberment of the Union. The press sustained at Washington by the direct patronage of the Executive from day to day utters nothing but treasonable doctrines, says nothing which has not for its purpose the breaking up of the government on the inauguration of the President elect, of the people.

This deserted reception hall is significant of the judgment the people will mete out to the chief author of our present calamities for years—for all time—in the future. To bitter and unscrupulous partisans it may seem a holiday business thus to poison a nation's peace, and to bring on it every form of overwhelming calamity but there are millions of men who will rise against such an infamous abuse of the freedom of opinion which our institutions give, and will attach undying infamy to that which seems to flourish bravely in the hour of its temporary success. It is not, it cannot be possible that our institutions have become so degraded and debased as that patriotism no longer exists; that no emergency can call forth manliness, unyielding firmness, and such devotion to great civil duties as this small account of life, and of all else that it may be requisite to sacrifice to save the State. It is not a cowardly business to play, or to permit others to play traitor in the mansion built by and for the Executive of a great free people like this. The conviction of the people that wrong of such magnitude had already been done kept the White House empty on this last reception day, and if its inmate has felt the full force of the rebuke it may save us from future disaster. —North American.
