THE WAR HAS COMMENCED

With a wish and a great contradiction of the message tonight, the telegraph now brings the start-around Anderson and the brave man who have faithfully guarded their country's flag within the walls of Fort Mifflin, have been their second hands at length.

The dispatch in this paper is a pretty full, and unacceptably substantive as the main factor, but in the order here is that they are from the Administration. As to the reported breach in the south-east angle of the fort, we do not believe it for a place like this wall is 14 feet thick. The fort had not been, according to the accounts, that they were to reach that point some time during the night. Further advice will be given as it comes.

The President must either see the rebellion of the South as a national matter, or the nation must be degraded and abandoned. Civil war is to be waged, but those who have betrayed the nation must be overpowered, or the nation must go to pieces. Proclamation will not answer, if it is not the will of the war will be more deadly. If the President is determined to fight, he will make through with it, and call upon the people to support him, and those who are loyal to the Union will support him.

The House took up the Appropriation bill in the evening, and passed it by a vote of 219 to 197. The bill appropriates $5,000,000 to the Treasury for the purchase of arms and munitions. The bill also appropriates $5,000,000 to the Treasury for the purchase of arms and munitions.

The Senate took up the Appropriation bill in the evening, and passed it by a vote of 68 to 32. The bill appropriates $5,000,000 to the Treasury for the purchase of arms and munitions. The bill also appropriates $5,000,000 to the Treasury for the purchase of arms and munitions.
